COLLINS, CRAIG TAKE STEP FOR UNITED IRISH

Eliminate British in Settling Rows.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Jan. 21.—A long step toward eventual unity of Ireland was taken today when Michael Collins, the chief of the Irish provisional government, and Sir James Craig, the Ulster premier, met in London.

MICHAEL COLLINS.
[Tribune Foreign News Service.]

The Irish delegates in London regard today's meeting as almost as important as the signing of the peace treaty itself.

The meeting was described as being most cordial and Craig, who had recollections of his meeting with Eamon de Valera when the Irish republican leader lectured him for an hour on Ireland's wrongs in the past without coming to business, was agreeably surprised to find Mr. Collins was even more anxious than himself "to stop talking and to get on with work."

Issue Joint Statement.

After the conference, lasting only about an hour, an agreement was arrived at which was embodied in the following joint statement:

"Michael Collins and Sir James Craig met in conference today. After discussion, the following mutual agreement was reached.

"1. The boundary commission as outlined in the treaty is to be altered. The governments of the free state and northern Ireland are to appoint one representative each to report to Mr. Collins and Sir James Craig, who will mutually agree on behalf of their respective governments on the future boundaries between the two.

"2. Without prejudice to future consideration by his government on the question of tariffs, Mr. Collins undertakes that the Belfast boycott will be discontinued immediately and Sir James Craig to facilitate in every possible way the return of Catholic workmen, without tests, to the shipyards when a trade revival enables the firms concerned to absorb the present unemployed. In the meantime a system of relief on a large scale is being arranged to carry over the period of distress.

Unite to End Rail Dispute.

"3. Representatives of both governments to unite to facilitate the settlement of the railway dispute.

"4. The two governments will devise a more suitable system than the council of Ireland for dealing with the problems of Ireland.

"A further meeting will take place at a subsequent date in Ireland between the signatories of this agreement to discuss the question of amnesty for persons arrested after the truce.

MICHAEL COLLINS.
"JAMES CRAIG."

Eliminates Action by England.

There is little wonder that this is considered the most important event since the truce. The first clause eliminates England altogether from the settlement of the Irish frontiers. The truce provided for a frontier commission from each part of Ireland and one from England.

Now Collins and Craig in less than an hour agree to appoint their own investigators to settle the matter themselves. They also agree to throw over the council of Ireland as the link between the two governments and to devise something more effective, again without English aid. This is interpreted as pointing to an early unity between Ulster and the free state.

The lifting of the blockade by the south and the restoration of the Catholic workers by the north eliminates the chief cause for religious and political bitterness in Belfast, which has been responsible for so many murders recently.

SUICIDE BARES SOCIETY GIRL'S STRANGE LIFE

Stage Route Leads to Tragic End.

In the spring of 1903 a beautiful young woman lived in Kenilworth. From girlhood, through school and college, she had cherished a longing for stage life, an ambition that was fostered by appearances in amateur dramatics. Then came an offer from two fellow students at the Northwestern university to enter vaudeville. She took it. Her first appearance was in the old Fort Sheridan beer garden.

Three days ago a wreck of womanhood was found unconscious in a cheap rooming house. Beside her was a man. On a table near the bed were two empty poison bottles and two empty whisky flasks. They had plighted suicide together.

The police, delving into a strange suicide agreement surrounding the finding of a man and a woman unconscious in a rooming house at 70 West Grand avenue Thursday night, yesterday uncovered a story in which is involved, not only mystery, but romance of stage life.

The man is Alfred A. Nichols of Julesburg, Colo., and Kansas City, an ex-member of the navy medical corps. He is reported to be dying at the Passavant Memorial hospital.

The woman, who died yesterday in the hospital, was Miss Ursula Thompson, daughter of a once well known Chicago manufacturer, W. H. Thompson, now engaged in business in New York City. Once she was a member of society circles of Kenilworth, and noted for her beauty. She lived in a fashionable home. She graduated from Monticello seminary and Northwestern university.

Stars in Class Play.

As the star of "Puss in Boots," the seminary's class play, she gained the praise of her fellow students. And so was born a desire for the stage which grew until she cut away from her family and friends to enter vaudeville with two fellow students at the university. A Northwestern alumnus wrote their sketch. A well known professor coached their rehearsals. Miss Thompson took a special course in the Anna Morgan School of Acting to fit her for her rôle.

The venture, once announced, startled Miss Thompson's North Shore acquaintances. The premiere was given at a beer garden just out of the fort.

As months passed by the trio was booked by a leading vaudeville circuit; they traveled and were hailed as headliners in a number of cities.

Meets and Loves a Soldier.

Years passed. The mother and the father of the girl separated. The war came and passed. And during it Miss Thompson met George C. Rogers, a soldier, and fell in love with him. They were married. He is now a patient at the Edward Hines Jr. Memorial hospital, recovering from shell shock.

Nichols was discharged from the navy medical corps in November and went to Kansas City, where he had a sweetheart, Miss Katharine Boschulte. She had written him loving letters full of plans of what was to be when he got a job and became able to take care of her.

But last week "Mr. and Mrs. Andrew McMullen" registered at the Grand avenue rooming house in Chicago. On Thursday night a maid, entering the room, found them unconscious. On a table beside the bed were two bottles which had contained poison and two which had held whisky.

Letters Reveal Identity.

They were taken to the Passavant hospital. Nichols' identity was established through letters from Miss Boschulte—signed "your sweetheart"—found in his pocket.

At first the young woman was thought to be a Miss Edith Gerald, but this was untrue. She died a few hours after reaching the hospital. Her mother, Mrs. Marie Thompson, who lives in Indiana but who is now at the Jackson hotel here, identified the body. Rogers, the young woman's husband, came in to the inquest, which began yesterday.

Where Miss Thompson met Nichols and how and why no one apparently knows. Chicago police have asked the Kansas City police to question Miss Boschulte to see if any clew rests there. The inquest was continued yesterday by Deputy Coroner S. F. Fischer.

REVOLVER CHASE IN LOOP STARTLES SHOPPING CROWD

Loop shoppers at Madison and Dearborn streets yesterday were startled by the sound of four shots and the sight of two men running out of the Boston store, one pursuing the other.

The pursuer and pursued both leaped on a West Madison street car. Traffic Policeman Andrew A. Webber also leaped on the street car, arresting both men.

One was A. H. Costello, detective for the Boston store. The other man gave the name of Fred Thompson, 32 years old, 1254 South La Salle street. He had departed from the store with a suit of clothes under his coat. Costello followed. When Thompson failed to halt when commanded the detective fired into the air.

Thompson was taken to the detective bureau. When searched $137 in three different pocketbooks was found in his possession. It was learned that he is wanted in Vancouver, B. C., for jail breaking and robbery.

DUBLIN 'REBELS' DRILL, DANCE, SING IN 'FORT'

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

DUBLIN, Jan. 21.—A group of Dublin unemployed, which seized rooms in the Rotunda building, has overcome all attempts to dislodge it and is still holding the fort.

The group, which numbers about 200, is a quasi-military body, consisting of officers and men. Last night they drilled at intervals and then sang and danced, so there was little sleep.

The situation, while amusing, has a serious side, as it is believed that several of the so-called officers are armed, and there are apprehensions that there may be an organized attack on property. The provisional government is watching developments.

CATCHES GIRL IN HUSBAND'S OFFICE AND KILLS BOTH

'I Warned, Caught, and Shot Them,' She Sobs.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Catching her husband and his stenographer in a compromising position this afternoon, a wife shot both. The shooting took pace in her husband's office.

The husband, Oscar Rosier, 37 years old, president of the Rosier Advertising agency, was taken to the hospital with a bullet wound below the heart. He died shortly afterwards.

The stenographer, Mildred Reckitt, 22 years old, who was taken to the same hospital, died soon afterward.

Wife Tells of Warning.

The wife, who is 21 years old, became hysterical as she waited beside her victims for the police.

"I warned them," Mrs. Rosier told the police. "She was my friend. When I was in the hospital three months ago having my baby they began running around together. I warned. I caught them. I shot."

Witnessed Clandestine Meeting.

Mrs. Rosier had suspected the relations of her husband and his stenographer for some time, the police declared, and had concealed herself in a rear room of her husband's offices during the afternoon. While there she watched Rosier and Miss Reckitt enter the front room together. Quitting her hiding place, she bought a revolver and cartridges from a nearby pawnshop, the police said, returning to her husband's offices.

When she threw open the door Mrs. Rosier drew the revolver from the handbag, firing twice. The first shot struck her husband, while the second struck Miss Reckitt.

UPPER MICHIGAN ISOLATED; ICE HOLDS CAR FERRY

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—The upper peninsula of Michigan tonight is still isolated from the lower part of the state.

The Chief Wawatam, a car ferry, was stuck hard in an ice drift half a mile out of Mackinaw City in its second attempt to carry a shore train across the straits of Mackinac from St. Ignace.

The Chief Wawatam was from Thursday evening until early this morning in a struggle with the ice trying to cross the eight miles of the straits. Fifty passengers slept two nights on the train, mostly in a day coach. Included were a number of women and children.

Sault Ste. Marie and all other upper peninsula points are without any mail from lower state. Freight and passengers are jamming St. Ignace and Mackinaw City.

STORY OF CONFLICTING CABLES ON THE POPE THROUGH SATURDAY

All of yesterday and until late into the night the world was kept in suspense by conflicting rumors regarding the fate of the pope.

Most of Europe went to bed last night thinking that his holiness had passed away, but, due to the difference in time between Rome and America, the press of this country learned during the early evening that the reports of the death were not true and that the pope was still alive, although losing ground.

At 11:30 a. m. Saturday a London dispatch by the Associated Press said:

"LONDON, Jan. 21.—A Berlin dispatch to Reuter's this afternoon says that word has been received that Pope Benedict is dead."

At 12:34 p. m. yesterday (Saturday) Chicago received the following from Paris:

"PARIS, Jan. 21.—A Berlin dispatch to the Havas agency quotes the Wolff bureau as saying that Pope Benedict died at 3:35 o'clock this afternoon, Rome time."

At 12:24 p. m. the Associated Press carried a "flash" message which said "Pope dead." At 12:32 came the bulletin, "Kill flash on pope; untrue."

At 12:43 a message sent from London by the Associated Press and timed "London, 6:53 p. m.," said:

"Cardinal Bourne, archbishop of Westminster, stated this evening that he had been officially notified by telegraph from Rome that Pope Benedict was dead."

At 1:11 p. m., Chicago time, the Associated Press brought the following bulletin:

"ROME, Jan. 21.—[Reuter's.]—Pope Benedict died late today."

At 3:45, Chicago time, Chicago received this message:

"London, Jan. 21.—[By the Associated Press.]—A Reuter dispatch from Paris, received tonight, quotes a Rome message, timed 8 p. m. in that city, stating that Pope Benedict was still alive at that hour."

At 4 o'clock, Chicago time, the Associated Press brought in the following message:

"LONDON, Jan. 21.—[By the Associated Press.]—Cardinal Bourne's secretary announced this evening that the announcement of Pope Benedict's death authorized by a member of the cardinal's staff this afternoon was a mistake and that no official news of his holiness' death had been received.

"This afternoon's announcement, given by a member of the cardinal's staff to various correspondents, stated that official information had been received of the pope's death. A news agency first issued the statement that the cardinal had confirmed reports of the pope's demise, and the Associated Press telephoned to the cardinal's residence to confirm this, and one of the cardinal's secretaries replied that they had the news officially."

At 5:27 this message was received:

"PARIS, Jan. 21, 10:45 p. m.—[By the Associated Press.]—The papal nunciature here officially denies reports of Pope Benedict's death, and states that the nunciature has received no communication from Rome since the bulletin issued by the pope's physician at 5:30 p. m. (Rome time), saying that the condition of the holy father had become worse during the day, with respiration more difficult and the heart continuously weaker."

At 4:54 p. m. Chicago time this report was received:

"PARIS, Jan. 21.—[By the Associated Press.]—A Rome dispatch to the Havas agency, timed at 8 o'clock this evening (Rome time) said Pope Benedict was suffering great pain. Dr. Battistini was remaining at the pope's bedside."

At 7 p. m. this message was received in THE TRIBUNE office:

"Rome, Jan. 22, 1 a. m.—[By the Associated Press.]—Members of the household announce at this hour a slight improvement in the pope's condition."

At 8:40 last night the United Press sent out a bulletin from New York calling attention to the erroneous reports of the pope's death by the Associated Press and the International News services during the day. The United Press called attention to the fact that its dispatches from Rome throughout the day gave the pope's condition as critical, but at no time did they report the pontiff as having died.

BULLETIN.

ROME, Jan. 22, 2:30 a. m.—(United Press.)—Pope Benedict is still resisting death. Physicians said he was losing his hearing and between the intervals of coma the pontiff was unable to recognize those at his bedside. Masses were said in his chamber at midnight. He manifested no evidence of being aware of what was going on around him.

REPORT OF HIS LAST HOURS

ROME, Jan. 22, 2:30 a. m.—[By the Associated Press.]—The end of Pope Benedict's life is near at hand. This was announced without qualification by the attending physicians at an early hour this (Sunday) morning. All hope had been definitely abandoned, and at 2 a. m. a fatal issue was pronounced imminent.

There had been moments during Saturday when it was feared the end had come, but stimulants revived the pontiff, and his natural powers of resistance carried him through the turning point temporarily.

The holy father seemed to cling to life as did Pope Pius X. in 1914, when the final outcome was in doubt for many hours.

Cardinal Says End Is Near.

Dr. Battistini, the chief attending physician, visited the patient several times Saturday evening and throughout the night. Each time he said that any minute might see the conclusion of the long hours of suffering through which Benedict XV. had passed in his fight for life.

The last announcement of the evening to the diplomatic representatives waiting in the ante-chamber was made by Cardinal Gasparri, the papal secretary of state, who said: "A catastrophe is imminent. The holy father is getting worse and worse; we must be prepared for the inevitable."

The cardinal's face was downcast and sad. He spoke in quiet tones, with deep emotion, making gestures with his hands, showing that his holiness was sinking lower and lower.

"Would Give Life for Peace."

After the publication of the latest bulletin Cardinal Giorgi, Mgr. Migone, Father Basil, and Dr. Battistini remained by the bedside. After a time the doctor told his holiness that they were praying for the peace of the world, to which the pope replied:

"I would willingly offer my life for the peace of the world."

He then turned on his side and lay watching those near him.

At another lucid period late last night the pope was able to partake of nourishment; he then instructed the major domo to wake him in time for mass, to be celebrated at 5:30 in the morning in his chapel adjoining the bedroom.

A Day of Anxiety.

Saturday was a day of uncertainty in Rome and deep anxiety among those who watched and prayed at the Vatican, for virtually all hope of the pope's recovery was abandoned even in the early hours of the morning.

As the hours passed the wonder grew at the recuperative powers of the holy father, which enabled him to pass from one sinking spell and another to periods of comparative restfulness and strength.

It was thought that if the pope passed safely through Friday night he would have a chance of life after the dawn, and so it proved. In the early part of the day sleep came and seemed to add to his powers of resistance.

Throughout the day great crowds gathered around the Vatican, and a double row of Royal guards took up positions in the outskirts of St. Peters, forming a passageway for diplomatic representatives, prelates, and other notable personages constantly arriving.

Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, received a great number of telegrams from all parts of the world, including those from King George of England, King Alfonso of Spain, the king of the Belgians, and the president of Brazil.

Anounces "No Further Hope."

The cardinal spent considerable time in the sick room, but entered the antechamber shortly after 5 o'clock in the evening, where he was surrounded by those who had waited hours for definite news. He said to them:

"I came out to announce to the diplomatic corps that there is no further hope. The pope may be considered as having virtually ceased to exist."

This caused consternation among those assembled in the pontifical apartment and Gasparri was weeping as he came from the room in which the pontiff was dying.

And yet, later in the evening, more hopeful word was received from the pope's bedside, and on each occasion the spirits of those in the Vatican were relatively raised, notwithstanding Dr. Battistini's continuous admission that the pontiff's condition was "most grave."

Talks to His Doctor.

An all night vigil which the Associated Press correspondent kept near the pope's private apartment brought evidence that the pope clung to life only by a slender thread. He passed an extremely restless night, suffering as he was from extensive congestion of both lungs and from the intense agony caused by shallow and rapid respiration.

When Dr. Battistini visited his holiness in the very early hours of Saturday morning the patient rallied somewhat and was able to exchange a few words with those in attendance.

When Battistini said to the pope, "I am going now," the holy father smilingly replied, "But, why don't you go, my dear old man?"

Cardinal Says Mass.

Oxygen was administrated at various times and appeared to give slight relief. Shortly after 1 o'clock Cardinal Migone celebrated mass in the chapel adjoining the pope's bed chamber, situated on the top floor, at which members of the noble guard were present.

During all the hours of his suffering the pope never relinquished his affability toward those of his household who attended him, smiling, even bantering the doctors, and recognizing and appreciating every attention from his visitors. On his bed of pain the pontiff seemed a figure of imposing moral grandeur.

"What a man! What a pope!" have been common expressions of admiration. To his aged doctor, who refused to take rest, the pope said, "Go and lie down; you are an old man now."

When the pope's nephew, Marquis Della Chiesa, despite his own illness, came to the bedside early in the morning, the pontiff reproached him for his imprudence and begged him to return immediately to bed.

Twits Mgr. Gasparri.

When Cardinal Gasparri was unable to put his hand on the pontifical will in a drawer of the desk, the pope called to him:

"Your eyes bad. Bring me the drawer, I will look myself."

Thus, through hours of agony, there fell from his mouth for each who approached him a word and a smile, a "thank you" or some word of encouragement. Even when his condition became worse and he was no longer able to take oxygen, he desired the archbishop of Bologna to recount every detail of the fetes and receptions held at the recent enthronement of Mgr. Rocca as archbishop. At another moment he desired to know the names of the diplomatic corps present in the ante-chamber.

More than once during the last few days it has been remarked that Benedict preserved on his sick bed the same zeal, the same lucidity, the same spirit which he showed in his daily audiences, it might even be said to a greater degree.

The scenes at the Vatican, as moment by moment the sands of the life of Pope Benedict seemed to be running out, were most impressive.

In the simply furnished room where he lay growing shorter of breath and more rapid of pulse, with apparently nothing remaining done except to await the end, the attending cardinals in their purple cassocks, and the papal penitentiary in black, were kneeling in silent prayer.

The only sounds heard were the sobs of the pope's personal attendants, the low chanting of the penitential psalms, or an occasional word in delirium from the pontiff as his malady slowly undermined the wonderful store of nervous energy which was still resisting its progress.

Prince Chigi-Albani entered the pope's apartment at 12:30 o'clock. It is his duty to take possession of the apartment in case of death of the pontiff and to act as marshal of the conclave.

Each Visitor Questioned.

Each visitor who had been in the pontifical bedchamber was received with questions as to the pontiff's state. Most of them simply signified with their hands that the condition of his holiness was precarious, their solemn faces additionally testifying to the gravity of the pontiff's case.

Outside the Vatican a crowd lingered all night before the huge bronze gate leading from the square of St. Peter's, every one endeavoring to gather from the persons going in and out of the Vatican whether his holiness was faring well or ill. Some of the interested watchers took a position near the Egyptian column in the center, to see if from the light in the pontiff's room they could gain any inkling of what was going on.

Royal Family Prays.

The Italian royal family has been following anxiously the phases of Pope Benedict's illness, as the news was brought to them by Mgr. Baccaria, the court chaplain. When the church bells of Rome summoned the faithful to prayer for his holiness the members of the royal family met for prayers in their private chapel.

Last Work for Peace.

The Popolo Romano says it learns that on the day the pope took to his bed he began a letter to the archbishop of Genoa, setting forth the holy see's viewpoint on the reconstruction of Europe. The letter was to have been sent on the eve of the Genoa conference. It contained an exhortation to the heads of states to consider their responsibility before God.

The pope had only finished the introduction, in which he expressed satisfaction over the fact that a conference for the pacification of the world was to be held in his native city.

There is no confirmation of this from other sources.

Life of the Late Pope Sketched; Second of His Family to Wear Tiara

Europe had barely entered upon the second month of the conflict that historians call the world war when the frail little man who reigned as Benedict XV. ascended the throne of St. Peter's.

He was Giacomo Della Chiesa, scion of a noble family that traced its line back to the twelfth century. Pius X., who gloried in the title of the peasant pope, was dead; an aristocrat had succeeded him.

On Nov. 21, 1854, in the Palazzo Tagliavacche, 10 Salita Santa Caterina, Genoa, Italy, a son had been born to the Marchesa Edwiga della Chiesa. Attending physicians said the infant could live only a few hours. So it was baptized at once—baptized Giacomo Della Chiesa.

The literal translation of Della Chiesa is "of the church."

Mother Cherishes Hope.

The doctors despaired, but the mother cherished hope. She said her son must live, that he would live.

Sixty years later—on Sept. 6, 1914—the world was startled to learn his eminence, Giacomo, Cardinal Della Chiesa had been chosen as the 259th successor to St. Peter as supreme head of the Roman Catholic church. During all the speculation following the death of Pius X. his name had not been mentioned. He had been made a cardinal only a few months before.

But there was one who was not surprised. When the news was flashed to the Marchesa Edwiga Della Chiesa, then a venerable woman in her '80s, the mother of the pontiff merely asked that she be escorted to the cathedral in Pegli.

Weeps at His Election.

There she gave thanks—her family had given another pope to the church. The first was Innocent VII., elected in 1404.

The honor brought joy to the mother, but to the son it brought bewilderment. He wept. He feared he could not bear the burden suddenly put upon him. He shrank from the responsibility thrust upon "one frail brain."

Any who might have shared this concern soon had their fears dispelled. One week after his coronation Pope Benedict appealed for peace through an encyclical to the episcopacy of the world. He urged rulers to "enter into a council of peace with all speed."

There was no heartening response. But he followed one peace proposal with another at brief intervals throughout the war. When his plan for a Christmas truce during the first year failed to silence the guns Benedict, on Jan. 18, 1915, decreed that on Feb. 7 the clergy and laity of the Catholic church throughout the world should join in peace services.

Then on July 28, 1915, the first anniversary of the outbreak of war, and again in March, 1916, his holiness made other appeals. In May, 1916, through Mgr. Bonzano, papal delegate to Washington, Pope Benedict suggested that President Wilson act as mediator. This country was then on the brink of a break with Germany, and Mr. Wilson did not reply to the pope's proposals.

Perhaps Benedict's most famous communication on behalf of peace came on Aug. 8, 1917, when, in his own handwriting, he addressed the rulers of the world, exhorting them to lay down arms.

Protests to Emperor.

While some of the pontiff's efforts provoked allied criticism, based on the charge that Emperor Charles of Austria was influencing the Vatican attitude, there was evidence that his holiness was not "pro-German." He is said to have disapproved of the invasion of Belgium. He protested to Emperor Charles against the shelling of Paris by long range guns, calling it a "wanton massacre."

And the pope's evident satisfaction when Jerusalem fell to Gen. Allenby's forces made him a target of the German press.

On Jan. 4, 1919, just before the peace conference opened, Woodrow Wilson visited the Vatican. At the conclusion of a private audience, during which, it was reported, social and treaty questions were discussed, Pope Benedict gave Mr. Wilson a mosaic reproducing Guido Reni's celebrated picture of St. Peter. The gift was valued at $40,000.

Aided Irish Pacification.

Just as he prayed for cessation of hostilities during the world war, his holiness was an ardent advocate of the negotiations that have so recently culminated in peace between England and Ireland. When the treaty was ratified Benedict dispatched a message to King George congratulating the latter upon his part in effecting a settlement.

Giacomo Della Chiesa became the spiritual head of 300,000,000 before he was 60 years old. He first expressed wish to be a priest when he was 13 years old. But if the hopes of his father, the aristocratic Marchese Giuseppe Della Chiesa, had been realized, his field of achievement would have been before the bar—as a lawyer.

"You have plenty of time to think of that," the old marquis said, when the boy voiced his yearning for priesthood. "For the present keep on with your studies. Perhaps you will change your mind."

Father Yields to Desire.

But the boy did not change, although he never mentioned his ambition again until he was 21 years old. Then, having qualified as a lawyer, he renewed his appeal for permission to enter the clergy. And the father, disappointed, but too wise to oppose so dominating a desire, yielded.

Whereupon the young man entered the Capronican college in Rome, where four years later he was ordained a priest. He went from college to the Academy for Noble Ecclesiastics. Then he became secretary to Mgr. Rampolla, who was later made a cardinal and who, under Pope Leo XIII., was papal secretary of state.

Cardinal Rampolla made the young priest undersecretary of state. Della Chiesa had held many important and influential ecclesiastical positions before Dec. 16, 1907, when Pope Pius X. made him an archbishop and assigned him to the important see of Bologna. Pius himself officiated in the consecration, which took place in the Sistine chapel and attracted world-wide attention. The tribute was an unusual one.

Not Strong Physically.

Pope Benedict was physically ill favored. He was small of stature and thin. The right shoulder was noticeably elevated above the left, and other defects gave an impression of nervousness and weakness. But his intellectual energy and power were more than a match for these handicaps at every stage of his career. An ample brow, an esthetically molded face, and black, penetrating eyes prepared associates for the keenness of the mind they encountered in dealing with him.

Though springing from a noble family, Benedict was throughout his career a man of the people, a friend of the poor. Innumerable incidents of his charity and generosity have been recorded.

EUROPE BEGINS MANEUVERING TO NAME NEW POPE

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Jan. 21.—The Catholic capitals of Europe are considering the selection of a successor to Pope Benedict who will be acceptable to their respective nations. It is said the election will be the most open ever held on account of the elimination of Austria's age long right to veto, which formerly assured the Hapsburg nominee of success.

The following groups already are preparing for the election: Central Europe, with the pan-German interests, are dominating the Austro-Hungarians because it is realized that only a union can provide the strength which the Hapsburg veto gave before.

Poland and Czecho-Slovakia form an uncertain element, but it is believed that they will rally to the French selection.

The Italians are preparing for agreement with the Spaniards, and these may eventually join the central European interests. There is said to be jealousy of France's championship of Catholic interests in Syria and the near east and fear of strengthening French prestige already based on France's military supremacy.

Due to the Anglo-Irish peace, it is believed that both the Canadians and Irish will fall in line with the other Anglo-Saxon Catholics.

ANCIENT RITES PRESCRIBED FOR POPE'S PASSING

Funeral Ceremony of Nine Days' Duration.

BY GEORGE BARNARD.

With the death of a pope, the "power of the keys" passes into the whole body of the cardinals, who assume jurisdiction of the Catholic church.

The care of the "temporalities" of the church falls upon a little known body of seven men in Rome, who are already at the vatican discharging their duties.

They are the prelati cherichi de camera, and the posts which they occupy are in the nature of sinecures gained by devoted service. Their sole responsibility is the care of the church's temporalities at the death of a pope. When the new pope is elected their duties end.

The scene at the death of a pope is governed by strange ceremonial.

The cardinals and chamberlains are gathered around the pontiff's sick bed, and the pope has breathed his last.

"Testing" the Pope's Death.

The cardinal camerlengo, wearing his mozetta and mantelletta as though the pope were still alive [for these articles are not worn by members of the sacred college when the death of a pope is formally announced] proceeds to carry out the ancient function of testing the death of the pope.

Approaching the body, the cardinal camerlengo, carrying a small hammer of silver, strikes the dead pontiff on the forehead, calling his name—the name of his baptism which the world has long forgotten.

"Giacomo," calls the cardinal, striking the head of the dead pope.

"Giacomo," he calls again, repeating the act.

"Giacomo," and for the third time the little silver mallet descends.

Then the cardinal camerlengo turns to the bystanders.

"The pope is really dead," he announces.

The "De Profundis" is recited solemnly and tearfully by those at the bedside.

The maestro della camera draws the fisherman's ring from the finger of the corpse and hands it to the cardinal camerlengo, who then leaves the death chamber.

Diplomats Are Notified.

It is the duty of the cardinal secretary of state (Cardinal Gasparri) to notify the members of the diplomatic corps of the pope's death. With that, his office ceases, his appoinment being only for the lifetime of the pontiff.

The cardinals discard mozzetta and mantelletta; and, as a sign of their new authority, devout people kneel to them as they would to the pope.

The government of the church by a large body of cardinals being impracticable, they depute three of their number, to be changed every three days, to act with the cardinal camerlengo, forming thus an executive of four. The choice is made by seniority, and not by popular selection.

Ancient Customs Followed.

Since the sixteenth century it has been customary to make an incision in the corpse and to take out the entrails. These are embalmed and buried separately. The body is washed with perfumed water, and the operation of embalming takes place the day after death.

The body is then garbed in the white cassock, surplice, bishop's robe, papal cap and stole, and is laid on a funeral couch under an impressive canopy of red and gold.

On the day of interment, a stately procession winds around St. Peter's to the choir chapel, where three coffins are laid out, one of cypress, one of lead, and one of oak.

The noble guards and chaplains who bear the body of the dead pope from its place of repose lay their burden in the cypress coffin.

Three purses are placed in the coffin by the majordomo. They contain the gold, silver, and bronze medals which have been struck each year during the pope's reign and which bear his effigy.

Pope's Record Buried with Him.

A metal cylinder containing a record, on parchment of the pontificate which has just closed, is placed at the feet of the dead pope by the senior of the cardinals created by him.

A veil of white taffeta is thrown over the head of the corpse, another over the hands, a purple veil over the breast, and over all is spread a shroud of red brocade lined with ermine and fringed with gold.

When the lid of the coffin is screwed down, the possession of the corpse passes from the sacred college to the canons of St. Peter's, who are bound by oath to produce the body when duly called upon to do so.

The cypress coffin is placed in the lead coffin, which is sealed with the arms of several officials of the holy see and of St. Peter's. Then the oaken case encloses all, and the caskets are deposited in a niche at the side of the choir chapel. Here they remain for at least a year, pending preparation of a suitable tomb. The niche is closed with a marble slab.

The funeral ceremonies occupy the whole period of nine days which customarily elapses between the death and interment of a pope.

LIFE AND PROGRESS OF POPE BENEDICT

Born at Pegli in the diocese of Genoa, Italy, Nov. 21, 1854.

Ordained to the priesthood in 1878.

Became secretary to Mgr. Rampolla, afterward Cardinal Rampolla, when the prelate was papal nuncio to Madrid, Spain, in 1883.

Returned to Rome with Cardinal Rampolla and entered the secretaryship of state, one of the "minutanti" in 1887.

Appointed substitute of the secretariate and secretary of the cypher in 1901 under Cardinal Merry De Val.

Appointed archbishop of Bologna Dec. 16, 1907, by Pope Pius X., and on Dec. 25, 1907, consecrated in the Sistine chapel by the pontiff.

Created a cardinal by Pope Pius X. at consistory May 25, 1914.

Elected pope Sept. 3, 1914.

Took name of Pope Benedict XV. and gave his first apostolic blessing Sept. 3, 1914.

Bishop Hoban Pays High Tribute to the Dead Pontiff

Bishop Edward F. Hoban, who, in the absence from the city of Archbishop Mundelein, is in charge of the arch diocese of Chicago, issued the following tribute to the late pontiff:

"The news of our holy father's unexpected death, which has just reached us through the Associated Press, throws a cloud over the entire church—I might say even over the entire world. Benedict XV., as we have learned to know him and to love him during the few but momentous years of his pontificate, embodied in his life those high and beautiful traits of character which were reflected in every word and action.

"His affectionate heart was most tender in its sympathy, and, elevated by grace, it spent itself in those many unselfish duties of unbounded Christian charity during the past troublesome years when even those of the household of the faith were turned in enmity one against the other.

"Called by Almighty God to fill the chair of Peter in the very midst of the world's greatest war—a war that had broken the heart of his saintly predecessor, Pius X.—Benedict XV. threw himself with all his energy and the full weight of his exalted position into the study of that seemingly hopeless problem.

"The keynote of his policy was clearly and beautifully set forth in his note to the belligerent powers in August, 1917: 'To maintain perfect impartiality with respect to all belligerents as is appropriate for him who is the common father and who loves all his children with an equal affection; to endeavor always to do the greatest possible amount of good to everybody without exception of person or distinction of nationality or religion, as is dictated to us by the universal law of charity and by the supreme spiritual office intrusted to us by Christ; finally as is equally required for pacificatory mission to omit nothing so far as lay in our power—that might assist in hastening the end of this calamity by endeavoring to bring the people and their rulers to more moderate resolution, a just and desirable peace.'"

Reichstag Honors Pope When Death Is Reported

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

BERLIN, Jan. 21.—Berlin heard of Pope Benedict's death through President Loebe of the reichstag, who received the message during the morning session. President Loebe immediately addressed the reichstag, every member, including the bolshevists and atheists, rising and bowing their heads while Herr Loebe pronounced a short eulogy:

"The whole German people are in sorrow and feel the deepest grief over the pope's death," he concluded.

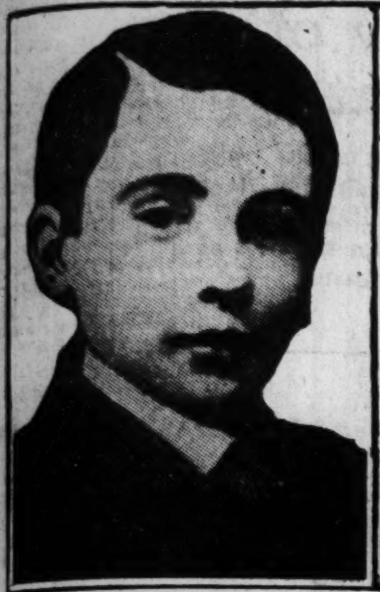
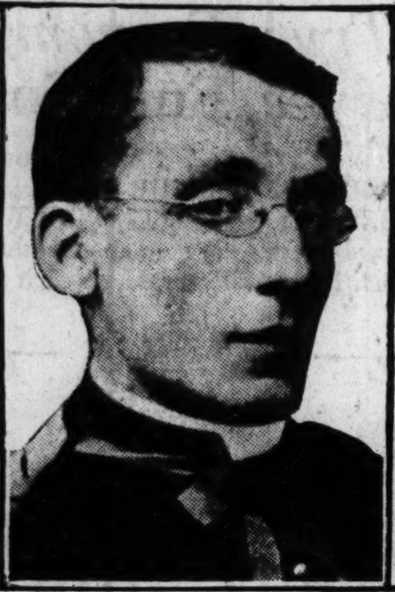
LIFE OF POPE BENEDICT XV. TOLD IN PICTURES



THE POPE, as he appeared during his boyhood at Pegli, Italy. He was born Nov. 21, 1854, the heir to a marquisate.



THE POPE when he was archbishop of Bologna. This picture was taken while he held the see to which he was elevated on Dec. 16, 1907, being consecrated by Pope Piux X. himself in the Sistine chapel, an unusual honor.

AFTER HE WAS MADE a cardinal. This picture was taken after he obtained his red hat in May, 1914, less than six months before mounting the throne of St. Peter's.

AS THE NEW POPE. This is the first picture of Benedict XV. in the white robes of the papacy. It was taken shortly after he had been selected by the college of cardinals as the successor of Pius X.

THE CORONATION on Sept. 6, 1914, of Pope Benedict XV. as the two hundred and fifty-ninth successor of St. Peter. In the photograph the pontiff is seen bowing his head to receive the tiara, or triple crown. This emblem is being offered to him by the senior cardinal-deacon.

THE POPE AT HIS DESK in the Vatican. It was here that he prepared the various appeals that were addressed to the warring powers during the war. Here also he indited the message expressing his horror at the sinking of the Lusitania by a German submarine.

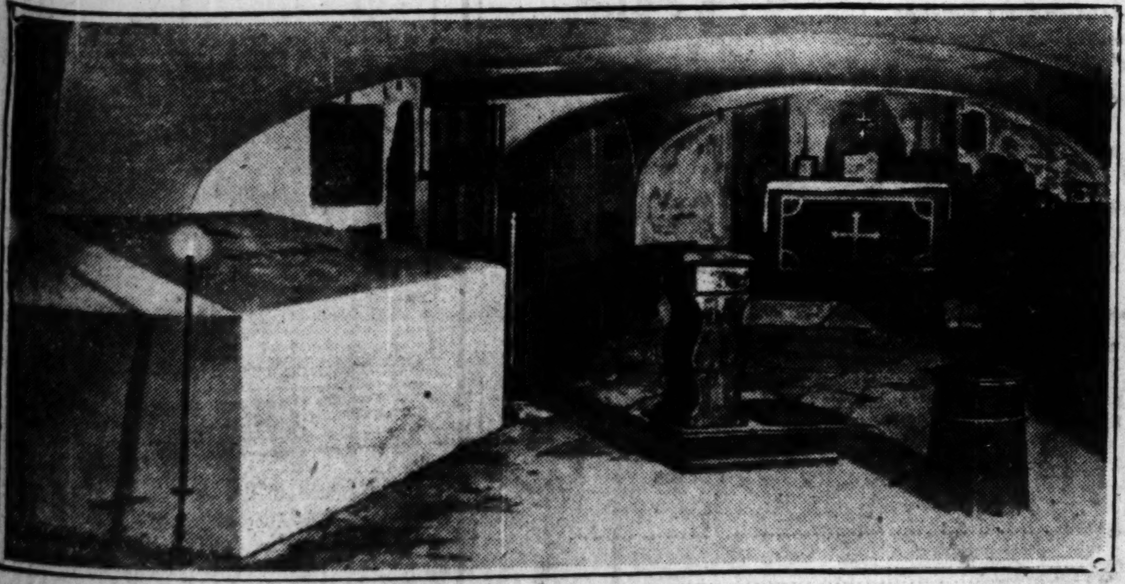
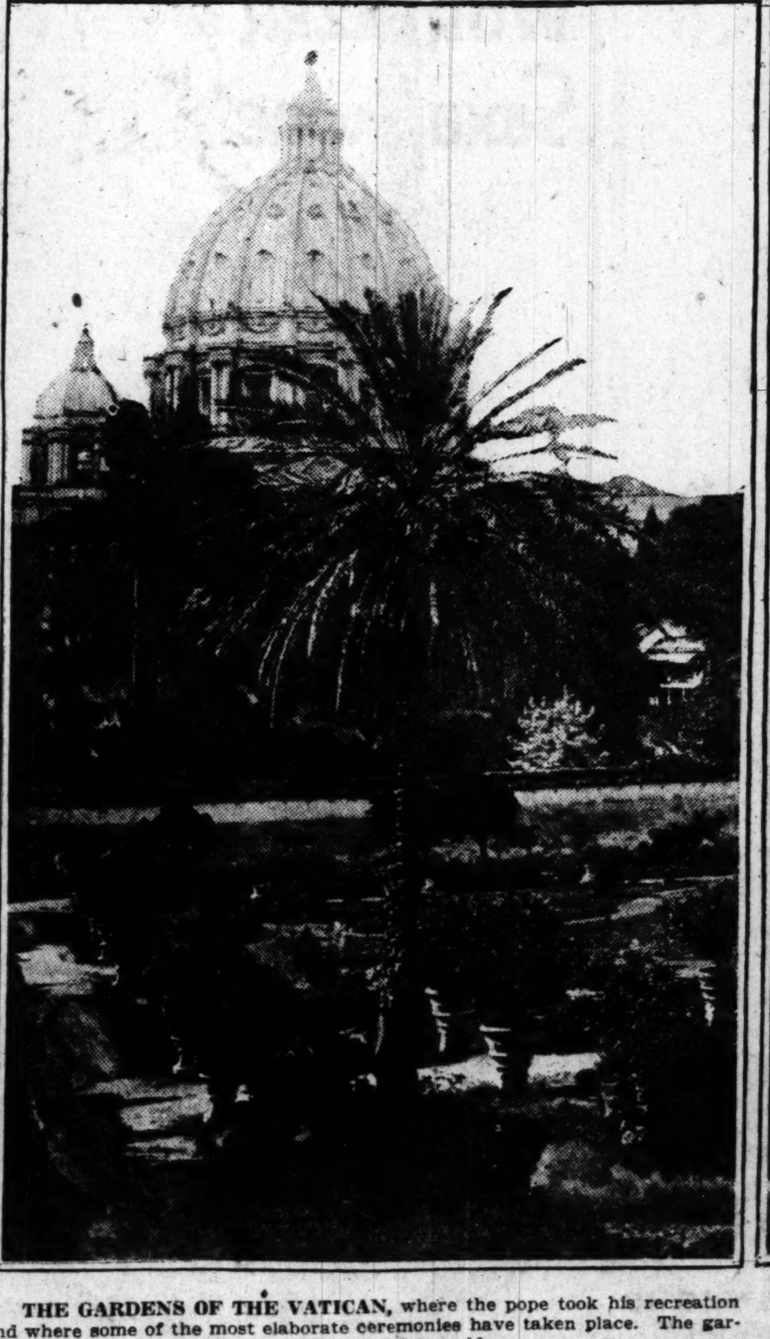
ST. PETER'S AT ROME in the foreground, and the Vatican in the background. Like his immediate predecessors in the papacy, the life of Benedict XV. was almost entirely confined to these buildings after his coronation, the pope refusing to enter the city of Rome because such an act might be construed as a recognition of the rights of the Italian kings, who destroyed the temporal supremacy of the papacy when they entered the Eternal City.



THE CRYPT IN THE VATICAN, the burial place of the popes. The tomb of Pope Benedict's immediate predecessor, Pius X., is in the foreground of this picture. All of the more recent wearers of the tiara have been laid to rest in this mausoleum.



THE GARDENS OF THE VATICAN, where the pope took his recreation and where some of the most elaborate ceremonies have taken place. The gardens are among the most magnificent in the world.

BOOZE MOPPERS HALT "GET RICH QUICK" SCHEME

Printers, Druggists, and Fake Labels Seized.

Paul I. Mendelsohn is a druggist at 1557 Diversey parkway. As a sideline he makes and bottles moonshine.

Martin F. Feht is a printer with a two story establishment at 3113 North Ashland avenue. As a sideline he lithographs whisky labels and revenue stamps.

Henry Koenigsberger is a tailor at 346 North State street. As a sideline he runs a bootlegging establishment.

There are others, but they don't count.

Mendelsohn, Feht and Koenigsberger are pals. That is, they were. Now that they're telling it all to the federal officials, they seem inclined slightly to blame each other.

Form Get Rich Quick Plan.

It seems they conceived a plan to get rich quick. Mendelsohn was to make and bottle synthetic moonshine. Feht was to label it and Koenigsberger was to sell it.

It worked at first. The federal officials have records of $50,000 worth of sales. Then last week they sold a case of the liquor to a prohibition agent. Yesterday they were raided. Total results: Forty cases of booze; 100,000 fake labels and stamps; three printers and half a dozen druggists besides the principals. They will be arraigned tomorrow.

Hunt O'Connor; Find a Bar.

Detectives searching for Tommy O'Connor last night stormed a house at 823 Gault avenue. They didn't find O'Connor, but found a first class bar. Five men, several gallons of grain alcohol, a quantity of Canadian bonded whisky and other stuff was seized.

A booze oasis, or rather several of them, in the 1500 block on Clybourn avenue, also was raided. Eleven men and a truckload of wine and whisky were seized by the twenty prohibition agents in the raiding squad.

Executorship Letters Granted in "Spoken Will"

Letters of executorship were granted yesterday in Probate court to Ludwig Kolar, husband of Mrs. Marie Kolar, 2453 West 51st street, whose "spoken will" recently was admitted to probate. Mrs. Kolar told her last wishes to her husband just before she died. Kolar, who deserted his wife several years ago, is cut off. The estate is valued at about $3,000.

ADMITS STEALING ICE SKATES.

Joseph Porto, 23 years old, 1119 Larrabee street, was placed on probation by Judge L. B. Jacobs yesterday on a charge of having stolen a pair of ice skates. He asked leniency, saying he stole the skates because he wished to enjoy himself as others in the parks.

BIRTH RATE LOW AMONG GOTHAM'S "FIRST FAMILIES"

New York, Jan. 21.—"First families" in New York soon wil become extinct if the low birth rate among the city's well to do native Americans continues, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner, declared today. Citing department records for 1921, he said the birthrate in the city's most fashionable section was 7 per 1,000.

In a German neighborhood the birth rate was 10 per 1,000 of the population; in an Irish district 22 per 1,000, and in a Negro district, 29 per 1,000.

MOTHER JEALOUS BECAUSE I WON MAN, GIRL SAYS

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Jan. 21.—The American colony here is being rocked by a lawsuit involving a mother's jealousy of her own daughter. The case is that of Mrs. Belle Hutchins, the adopted daughter of John Ramsey Graham of Chicago, who is seeking to obtain the expulsion from France of Harry Nelson of Boston, who was an ambulance driver during the war. Mrs. Hutchins charges Nelson with corrupting the morals of her daughter, Solange Lastazzy, aged 18, a child by a former marriage to Count Lastazzy.

Declaring Mrs. Hutchins for two years was in love with Nelson, Solange this afternoon burst forth impassionately and demanded that the judge ascertain if Mrs. Hutchins was her real mother.

"My mother loved Mr. Nelson and when he showed attention to me she turned me from the house and started trying to have Mr. Nelson ordered from France," said Solange. "Mr. Nelson obtained me a position dancing at the Folies Bergere, and afterwards at the Moulin Rouge, and now we are engaged to be married, but mother swore that he would never wed me."

Husband Aids Mrs. Hutchins.

Walter Hutchins, the third husband of Mrs. Hutchins and a former director of Woolwich arsenal, and Mrs. Roberta Acuff Joyce, the divorced wife of David G. Joyce, millionaire lumber man of Chicago, who was boarding at the Hutchins' palatial home near the Bois de Boulogne, testified on behalf of Mrs. Hutchins that they saw Nelson in the girl's room in the Hutchins mansion.

Servants testified that last November early in the morning during an all night party Solange and Nelson crept into the girl's room. Mrs. Hutchins attempted to commit suicide with a revolver when told that they were together.

Has Good War Record.

Nelson's friends are seeking to interest Ambassador Herrick in the case to prevent his deportation owing to his war record as an ambulance driver and afterwards with Gen. Wrangel in the Crimea.

Solange's lawyers assert that an investigation fails to show a birth record in the United States, France, Italy, or England, although the mother states that her daughter was born in London and that her father was Count Lastazzy. Solange went to New York with Carl Randall, a Chicago dancer, two years ago, dancing in America for two months.

GRUNAU, LEADER OF RECENT RAIL STRIKE, TO RETIRE

John Grunau, general chairman, and William Bond, general secretary of the United Railway Employés' association, leaders of the recent outlaw switchmen's strike, announced last night that they would retire from office Feb. 1. The two labor officials said that at a recent election they declined to be renominated, as business affiliations made it imperative for them to retire.

R. C. Greenly of San Francisco will replace Grunau as general chairman and F. G. Galloway of Indianapolis will succeed Bond as general secretary of the Railway Employes' association.

GIRL RELEASED FROM HOUSE OF GOOD SHEPHERD

Miss Frances Waddell, 19 years old, formerly a student at the Nicholas Senn High school was released from the House of the Good Shepherd yesterday by Judge Joseph H. Fitch in the Criminal court.

The girl, according to her story, was placed in the home on Thursday by her father, Arthur Waddell, 2302 Lunt avenue, who formerly conducted a barber shop in the Ashland block. On Jan. 12, she said, she had a birthday party and afterwards quarreled with her father. The next night she again ran away.

RICKARD FACES SERIOUS CHARGE OF YOUNG GIRL

New York, Jan. 21.—Tex Rickard, internationally known promoter of sporting events, was charged in Magistrate's court today with criminal assault on 15 year old Alice Ruck, public school pupil and daughter of an east side widow.

TEX RICKARD.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Through counsel, Rickard, who surrendered on learning a bench warrant had been issued, denied the charges, which were made by the Children's society on complaint of Hess, 11, were held as witnesses, the society quoting the girls as saying Rickard met them last fall at his public swimming pool in Madison Square Garden, gave them money, took them to his office, and then, on Dec. 10 last, assaulted the Ruck girl in an apartment in West 47th street, a few doors from 5th avenue.

Rickard Held in $1,000 Bond.

The promoter was under $1,000 bond tonight for examination next Wednesday. His attorney, Max D. Steuer, said in a statement that Mr. Rickard was the "most surprised man in the world," that he knew nothing about the case. The statement declaring the situation mystifying asserted Rickard undoubtedly had a number of bitter enemies, as he now was engaged in considerable litigation.

The three girls appeared in court clad in cheap dresses, plain coats, and cotton stockings. Their parents also were present.

Seen later in their simple quarters in the dim lit east side tenements, the parents all professed to have known nothing of the story until called to court. Complaining that their daughters were being held by the Children's society, they said the girls went to public school and habitually were home early at night. All said they had never heard of Mr. Rickard.

False Report at Hospital.

The Hess girl's mother said she was summoned to a police station last Saturday night, where she was told her daughter and the Ruck girl had been given to the Children's society after they had gone to Bellevue hospital and falsely reported having taking iodine. Since then the society had detained all three children.

Vincent Pisarra, superintendent of the society, who filed the charges against the promoter of the Dempsey-Carpentier bout, said that after the Children's court held the girls on a blanket charge of incorrigibility last week the society physician examined them and found that the Ruck girl alone showed indications of assault.

The Hess girl, detectives declared late tonight, figured in similar charges made against Angelos Beliery last November. At that time, they said, she and another girl, Elizabeth Curcoss, alleged Beliery had attacked them. The case was dismissed, however, when physicians testified the defendant was incapable of committing the crime charged.

JAPANESE PUPILS SEND PAINTINGS TO CHILDREN HERE

With the arrival of a bundle of paintings from Japanese school children in Yokohama yesterday, Peter A. Mortenson announced plans for an international exchange of work by school children.

The paintings, done by Japanese children between the ages of 10 and 14 years, were sent to Supt. Mortenson after he had addressed a number of pictures painted by Chicago school children to the superintendent of schools in Yokohama.

"The Japanese, who have planned their grammar schools almost directly after ours," said Mr. Mortenson, "are very much interested in what our pupils are able to do."

TWO FINED ON LARCENY CHARGES.

Frank Griffin, 5840 Prairie avenue, and William Burke, 3854 Cottage Grove avenue, were sentenced to the house of correction for six months and fined $100 on charges of larceny in the barber shop of Beverly Motley, 630 East 29th street.

FARMERS' BLOC STARTS BITTER WAR ON HARDING

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Charges that President Harding and his cabinet are seeking to undermine the agricultural bloc and that the proposed agricultural conference is mere "camouflage" to conceal their purposes, were made in the senate today by Senator Pat Harrison [Miss.], one of the Democratic spokesmen.

"For the last few weeks there has been a report of the administration's efforts to destroy the influence of that senate group trying to obtain the passage of legislation beneficent to agricultural interests," he said.

"That effort has been shown in every way, concerted and most persistent. We saw it first creep out in a message delivered by the President in the beginning of this congress, when he pleaded with members of congress not to ally themselves with groups or blocs along certain pursuits or geographical lines.

"A little later the secretary of war, evidently as the spokesman and mouthpiece of President Harding and the administration, delivered a speech in New York—I imagine his audience was composed of patrons of Wall street or manufacturers—in which he criticized and made light of the agricultural bloc and pleaded for united action from the country to discredit that group."

96 Automobiles Burn in Wilmette; Loss Is $300,000

Approximately $300,000 damage was caused yesterday morning when fire destroyed ninety-six automobiles stored in the W. & S. garage, Wilmette avenue and 13th street, Wilmette. Apparatus from Winnetka and Evanston assisted the Wilmette fire department.

$8,000 JEWELRY THIEF IS CALLED MASTER WORKER

The thief who obtained jewelry valued at $8,000 in the home of W. Irving Osborne, president of the Cornell Wood Products company, 1326 Ridge avenue, Evanston, is a master of his profession, police announced yesterday as finger print experts were dispatched from the detective bureau in an effort to discover how the burglar got the loot.

The jewels had been placed in a jewel box and locked in a compartment. None of the windows or doors of the hause had been disturbed. Yet some time between 8 o'clock Wednesday night and Thursday morning the jewels vanished, the burglar, apparently, leaving no trace.

POLITE FIREMAN FINDS IT PAYS TO BE "EASY MARK"

Desire to Be Helpful Gets Him $100 Award.

When a spurious Evanstonian aldermanic candidate steps out on a wet platform, in one plank of which he pledges a new fire engine house, and a common fireboy courteously supplies him with details of modern firehouse construction, etc.—what is there to do but bring said boy in blue to his just reward. All that aside, however; what we wanted to inquire was:

Will the aristocratic gentleman with the close-cropped, iron-gray mustache, who was approached in Michigan boulevard yesterday by the young man with the hard luck story, herewith take notice that he had at that moment the greatest opportunity for a quick turnover he ever had in his most likely prosperous life?

Dime Worth $100.

Will he be advised that he could just then have invested one dime, together with a smile and a hearty "Good luck!" and at once collected a profit of 1001 per cent.

It cannot be, reflected THE TRIBUNE politeness reporter, as he started on his daily pilgrimage, that courtesy lurks only in the hearts of the lowly and the humble. Human nature is human nature, he opined; there must be as much politeness among the prosperous as among the poor.

And straightway he saw coming towards him prosperity personified. He pulled his hat over his eyes and approached the man with the close-cropped mustache.

"Say, mister," he said with plaintive diffidence, "could you help a feller with a little change for somethin' to eat?"

Error for Prosperous One.

The reporter fell in step with him and walked alongside looking anxiously up into his face. The man muttered something incoherent and increased his pace. His error.

"Lemme see a pair of brogans—not too expensive," said the reporter next to a shoe store clerk. The latter went to work. It appeared soon that nothing suited the customer. Some too tight; some too loose; some cheap looking; some too high priced; if those tan ones were only black, etc.

The clerk hauled out dozens of pairs of shoes. Finally the reporter decided he didnt' want any after all.

"Come in again some time," said the clerk, but there was derision in his eyes, crust, not courtesy, in his voice—and, furthermore, he made the patron fasten his own shoes back on. What a golden chance that fellow had for the money!

CHESTERFIELD

Anton F. Kortas, who wins The Tribune $100 politeness award by submitting to imposition on his time by a stranger.

[TRIBUNE Photos.]

No Help for the Lame.

The reporter suddenly fell into a horrible limp. He appeared to have suffered a terrible sprain. As he wabbled painfully along he hoped some kind hand would give him a lift; but no one paid any attention. He decided to give some one a chance. A colored man in a porter's uniform came along:

"Hey, George!" called the reporter, and the man stopped. "Give us a lift for a couple of blocks, will you? I got a bad sprain."

"Sorry, ain't goin' yo' way," responded George; and those words cost him more than he will make in tips for many a day.

A winsome lunchroom cashier was the susject of the next essay: "I beg pardon, miss," the reporter said to her, "I've come away from home without a cent and won't be able to get back until late tonight. Do you suppose I could get a cup of coffee and some rolls here and pay you Monday?"

Girl Fails, Too.

The girl eyed the reporter suspiciously. "Well," she said, "you can ask the manager, but I doubt it. We've been stung with those stories before."

Why the manager? Here was another who failed to make a little investment for big returns.

And now the reporter decided to become the Evanstonian aldermanic candidate. Occasion found him soon thereafter wandering into the firehouse of engine company 35, in Robey street near North avenue.

"Was there something you wanted?" inquired a pleasant faced lieutenant seated near the door.

"Yes," said the reporter; "I thought somebody might be willing to show me around the firehouse a bit."

Lieutenant Muffs the Hundred.

"Sure," said the lieutenant lazily, and he turned and called "Tony!"

Wherewith the lieutenant deftly sidestepped the $100 and put it in the way of Fireman Anton F. Kortes, 2836 Christiana avenue.

Toney showed the stranger around. He explained and reëxplained numerous details about the big pumper; the obsolete engine that stood in the corner; showed him the horses; the hook and ladder; the sleeping quarters; how the house was built, and why it was so constructed. And after he had backed the veteran horses out and let the reporter rub their noses he was informed of his good fortune.

"Well, by gosh!" he said almost overcome. "These birds around here are always riding me about being an easy mark. I guess this will learn them something."

CARABAOS WHO PEEVED WILSON WALLOW AGAIN

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—The first public wallow in Washington of the Carabao since 1913 at the outset of the Wilson administration, when criticism from the President drove this famous military organization into retirement, was held tonight.

The Carabao, composed of American army officers who participated in Philippine campaigns, aroused the ire of President Wilson through caricatures, satires, and songs at their 1913 dinner, which reflected a lack of sympathy with the administration's Philippine policy.

A cartoon on the menu card picturing an American battleship named the "U. S. S. Piffle," with grape juice bottles for guns, a lecture platform for its fighting top, doves of peace perched upon its masts, and a moving picture tent covering one of its turrets, constituted the most flagrant offense.

Mr. Bryan, then secretary of state, and Mr. Daniels, the new secretary of the navy, shared the President's anger over the affair and an apology was sent to Mr. Wilson.

But tonight, after a nine years' silence, the Carabao came back. The peak of the occasion was reached when Col. James A. Moss, U. S. A., introduced Emilio Aguinaldo Jr., son of the famous leader of the Philippine insurrection. Young Aguinaldo is a student at a college in Boston.

The banquet hall was a reproduction of the tropical scenery of the Philippines. No details of old Luzon were omitted. Moving picture scenes of the Philippines, including one of Chief Justice Taft, then governor, astride a carabao, were introduced, with the chief justice present to view them.

Juan Pasig delivered a message of congratulation to the American army from the "younger Philippine generation" for the wonders that have come from its pioneer work in the islands.

PARKS BARRED TO PUBLIC DANCING SATURDAY NIGHT

Most of 'Em Open Floors to Private Clubs.

"A girl can't dance in this town unless she has a gentleman friend to take her around or she doesn't care where she goes." That is the statement made by Anna, a lonely Chicago girl who likes to dance. Is it true? Miss Genevieve Forbes of The Tribune is going to help find out.

BY GENEVIEVE FORBES.

Anna thought she had thirty chances to attend a decent community dance at one of Chicago's small parks last night, but she drew twenty-nine blanks.

One of the parks offered no dancing at any time, seventeen of them had no dances on Saturday night, eleven had given their halls over to private clubs and organizations. One, Grand Crossing park, 76th and Ingleside avenue, welcomed her to a community dance.

Anna came down from a small town in Wisconsin six months ago. She's young, fairly good looking, rather quiet, not an "awfully good mixer," and she likes to dance, just as much as the girls who attend dancing parties at the fashionable clubs and hotels.

Tries Park System.

Anna doesn't know much about the public dance hall. She prefers a small, chaperoned dance. So she determined to find out just what the small parks system, Lincoln park, south park, and west park, offered her, a lonely girl, a member of no club or organized group, a girl with no "boy friend" to take her out.

Here is the result of Anna's investigation yesterday: Union park, Ogden avenue and Randolph street, she was informed, never holds dances. There is no suitable assembly hall.

Seventeen of the parks offered a decent girl, wanting to spend a few hours Saturday evening dancing with congenial young people, nothing except basketball, volley ball, skating, community singing, and "free play."

"Saturday night," it was explained to her, "is a poor night for a community dance because everybody has a date. Anna has no "date." That's just why she has come to the community center.

Weekday Dancing Classes.

Her inquiries reveal the fact that in many of the parks the directors hold dancing classes during the week. Anna knows how to dance. She is seeking an opportunity to make use of her knowledge.

A voice over the telephone from McKinley park, West 37th and Western Avenue boulevard, tells the girl that "We don't have community dances any more. They're not what they're cracked up to be." No further explanation is given.

Ogden park, 65th and South Racine, according to an employé, discontinued community dances two years ago, "because too many people came." The crowd was not disorderly, it was explained, but just too big. A lack of dance directors made it impossible to give two dances a week and take care of the crowd. So there are no more dances.

Here's "No Dance" List.

The parks which had no dancing last night are: Bessemer park, West 89th and Muskegon; Cornell square, West 50th and South Wood; Davis square, 44th and Marshfield; Franklin park, South Kolin and West 15th; Fuller park, West 45th and Princeton; Garfield park, Hamlin park, Wellington and Hoyne; Hardin square, West 26th and Wentworth; Lake Shore park, foot of East Chicago avenue; Stanton park, Vine and Vedder; Marquette park, West 68th and South Central Park; McKinley park, 37th and Western; Palmer park, 111th and Indiana; Russell square, 83d and Bond; Seward park, Sedgwick and Goethe; Sheridan park, Aberdeen and West Polk, and Wells park, Montrose and Western.

Eleven park centers, according to yesterday's investigation, functioned splendidly for Saturday night entertainment of the club, the organized community within the community. But at these private dances admission was "by invitation." Anna had no invitation. She's "unorganized."

Dances by "private clubs" were scheduled for Armour square, 33d and Shields; Lyman Trumbull park, 104th and Bensley; Ogden park, 65th and Racine; Sherman park, 52d and Loomis; "The Broadway Social" was in sway at Douglas park; "Chicago Sporting club" was dancing at Holstein park, North Oakley and Hamburg; "Leten Svete" had taken over Dvorak park, Fish and West 21st; "E. L. I. Y. C. L." held possession of Eckhardt park, West Chicago and Noble; the "Central Woman's club" guarded the door of Mark White square, 29th and Halsted; "The Liberty Bell club" danced at Pulaski park, Blackhawk and Noble, and the "Leiderman Athletic club" froliced at Stanford park, South Jefferson and West 14th.

Once Dance Floor Open.

Finally, at Grand Crossing park, 76th and Ingleside, Anna found a welcome to a community dance, where the only requirement for admission was good conduct and a desire to dance. The director was pleasant; the music fine; the two hundred or so young people dancing were friendly. She had a glorious time.

But the next dance isn't until Feb. 18th.

Suppose she, or some of her friends, want to dance before Feb. 18th.

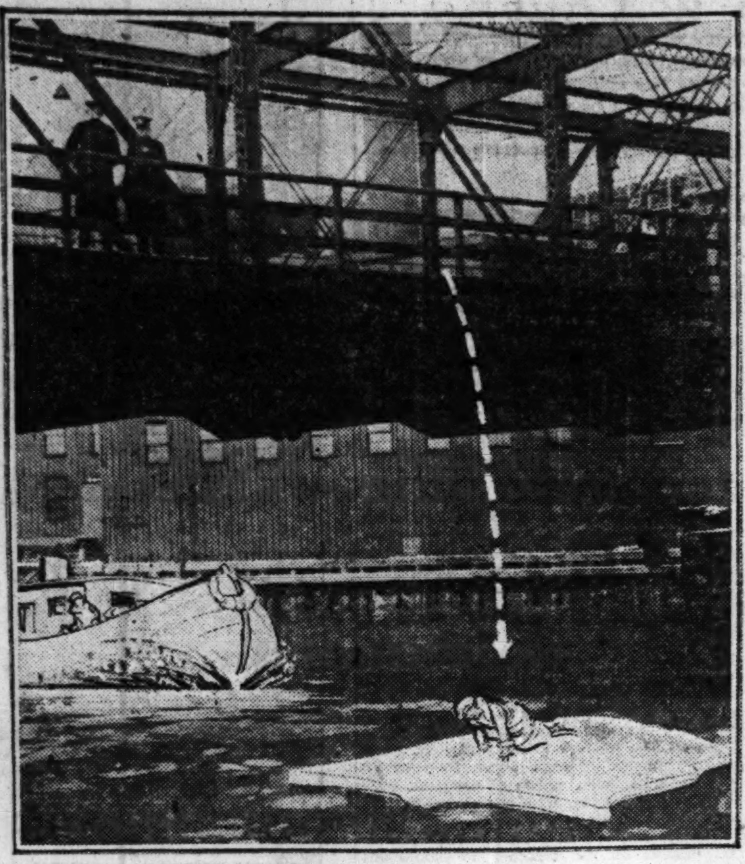
SAVED BY AN ICE CAKE



[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Photo-diagram showing how Mrs. Josephine Adamo sprang from the Halsted street bridge yesterday and fell on a huge cake of ice, which kept her afloat until rescued by a tugboat crew.

DESPONDENT

Mrs. Josephine Adamo, 33 years old, 536 West 26th street, is the mother of six children. Yesterday she became despondent because the family was without money or food, and as she was walking over the Halsted street bridge at 22d street decided to commit suicide.

Quickly clambering over the bridge rail, she sprang into the river. But when she fell it was not into the river, but on a huge cake of ice. Stunned, she lay quiet and the ice remained afloat.

Capt. Joseph Shea of the tugboat Edward James witnessed the attempted suicide. He went to the rescue.

Physicians at the hospital last night said Mrs. Adamo would recover from the shock and exposure.

ARBUCKLE WINS IMPORTANT POINT BY GIRL'S STORY

Defense Upheld in Zey Prevon's Version.

BY EDWARD DOHERTY.

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—The testimony of Miss Zey Prevon, the state's star witness in the case against Roscoe Arbuckle, on trial for manslaughter, will not be impeached.

Miss Prevon last Thursday afternoon declared on the witness stand that District Attorney Brady and his deputy, Milton U'Ren, had forced her to testify falsely, under threats of imprisonment.

Brady attempted to prove this morning through Howard Vernon and Walter Trefz, shorthand reporters, who were present when Miss Prevon made her statement, that there was no coercion of any kind used, and that the young woman made her statement voluntarily.

This brought on a frenzy of argument. The jurors were excused and the attorneys on both sides spouted for half an hour before the judge turned off the current, siding with counsel for defense, who had argued the state had not proved its witness a hostile one, and therefore had no right to impeach her. They fought bitterly for the witness who had turned so sensationally against the prosecution and were sustained in all their contentions.

Then the jurors came back and Mrs. Kate Hardebach took the stand. The "adopted aunt" of the girl said Miss Rappe was attired in a riding habit, boots and a panama hat when she left Los Angeles on Sept. 30.

Yesterday the habit, the boots and the hat were offered in evidence by Attorney Milton Cohen, for the defense, who hoped to impeach Mrs. Hardebach.

In her testimony at the first trial Mrs. Hardebach said Virginia never had a riding habit.

Cohen asked her today if in the latter part of August or the first of September she did not tell a Mrs. Day that Miss Rappe was ill. Mrs. Hardebach did not remember. Cohen asked that she be held under the jurisdiction of the court, for examination later.

THE DEATH OF THE POPE.

The death of Pope Benedict XV. marks the close of an interesting and important chapter in the history of the Roman Catholic church. His pontificate, though brief, has been notable for far sighted efforts in behalf of humanity and definite accomplishments for the church which give him a high place in its history and in the affections of his people.

Giacomo Della Chiesa brought to the Vatican a new understanding of the practical problems and needs of the church and of practical methods for meeting them. He was blessed with vision and diligent in effort for realization. Thus in the world war he saw what perhaps few men in high position saw, the imminent destruction of Christian civilization and the untold misery accumulating not only for the participants but for their children and their children's children.

Twice he sought to mediate for peace in the hope that some part of this misery might be averted. He failed, but was honored and is still honored for the effort and the realization of impending disaster to advancing civilization which the effort revealed. Failing in that high purpose, probably through no fault of his own, he revealed the practically humane side of his character by bringing about the exchange of letters and gifts between war prisoners and their families or friends through Switzerland. Many a miserable war victim owes him much for that practical humanitarianism and will gladly admit the debt.

In evidence of his practical successes for the upbuilding of the church there are now almost twice as many diplomatic representatives of lay governments at the vatican as there were before the war. Of these the return of France to the fold probably is the most notable. The government of France had separated itself from the church probably more completely than any other country. It had been not only separated but marked by opposition to the church and the development of a powerful anti-clerical party. This active enmity has been turned to friendship under Benedict. France again has an envoy at the vatican. In Italy also there is a distinct tendency toward much more amicable relations between state and church than have obtained for many years.

These are definite, practical accomplishments which must be credited to Pope Benedict. They mark the beginning of a new rise in the influence of the Church of Rome. Such accomplishments will give the character and pontificate of Benedict a place in history.

THE DIRT FARMER NONSENSE.

A bill just passed by the senate enlarges the membership of the federal reserve by one member, repeals the provision that two of the members be bankers, and directs that the president in appointing to the board have "due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests and geographical divisions of the country."

This bill is a compromise upon the stupid proposal to put a "dirt farmer" on the board. In modified form it is not seriously objectionable, since it leaves a considerable discretion with the President. The increase in the size of the board seems inadvisable and the repeal of the provision that two members shall be bankers is an obvious concession to prejudice.

However, no President will be compelled to appoint a "dirt farmer" to the board whether he can find one fit for such a place or not. To that extent the compromise is a victory of common sense over demagogy.

The notion that being a "dirt farmer" equips a man for service on the reserve board belongs to the school of thought which has devastated Russia in the last four years. Dirt farmers took charge of the banking system of North Dakota. If a "dirt farmer" merely by being a dirt farmer belongs on the reserve board a bank president ought to be secretary of agriculture.

There is no objection to having a dirt farmer on the reserve board if that dirt farmer is equipped with knowledge, experience, and mental training to solve the financial problems with which the board is required to deal. But there is objection to having a man on the reserve board simply because he is a dirt farmer. The fact that he is a dirt farmer no more implies his ability to cope with the problems of the reserve board than it implies his ability to command the navy, or manage a department store, or run a railroad, or head a college.

The dirt farmer idea was advanced as a means of protecting the interests of the farmer. To common sense it ought to be clear that a dirt farmer could not protect or advance the interests of the farmers unless he possessed sound ideas of finance. If he were merely a dirt farmer he would be not a protection but a danger to farmers, as are those members of the agricultural bloc who have been trying to sell to congress for months, and with some success, patent medicine devices for curing all the farmer's economic ills.

What the agriculturist needs for the protection of his interests in the reserve board is not representation by a man who may be a good farmer though a very incompetent financier, but by some well trained, experienced, and able western banker or business man who not only knows the financial needs and situation of the farmer but how to meet them consistently with the safety and welfare of the whole country, on which the farmer is as dependent as any one else.

Banks and business are dependent upon the prosperity of agriculture and bankers and business men realize it. To charge they are in a conspiracy to oppress and cheat the farmer is to charge them with not knowing their own plain interest and safety. It is not supported by reliable evidence and it is not compatible with common sense. The farmer perverts his thought and hurts himself by giving credence to it.

COLLEGES AS COUNTRY CLUBS.

President Butler of Columbia, in his annual report, inveighs against the tendency to consider a college "an inviting and satisfactory form of country club," blaming this partly upon "shiftless and ambitious parents," but also upon college policy. For the latter we suspect the American passion for mere bigness and a perverted competition based upon it are largely responsible. What the university should strive for is quality, not quantity.

Dr. Hopkins, president of Dartmouth, believes that the world needs a new type of leader, and that it is one of the chief responsibilities of the university to find men fit to be leaders and prepare them for service.

Unquestionably leadership in many fields requires today a more complicated technical equipment and a wider command of facts than in the past. Where is this highly equipped leadership to come from? Much of it from the workshop of experience, of course. Rockefeller and Carnegie and Schwab were alumni of the college of experience, starting with exceptional natural gifts. Washington and Hamilton were not college men, nor Lincoln. Nevertheless, however we may get our greatest leadership, it is plain that the mass of it would be the better for special preparation, and we agree with Dr. Hopkins that the preparation of leaders should be one of the chief responsibilities of our universities; in fact, we believe their main responsibility.

"Whether the colleges can produce leaders able to cope with the situation," says Dr. Hopkins justly, "is not proved, but higher education is the best hypothesis." And here the head of Dartmouth contributes a most valuable discussion of a principal problem of the college at the present. This is created by "a tremendously increased desire for higher education." At Dartmouth, he reports, there are nine men seeking education to one "we are able to teach with our facilities." This is the condition in different, degrees of intensity which confronts all the great schools. Dartmouth, we believe, is solving it in the best way. It is trying by raising its requirements to weed out the men who are getting the least out of college in order to be free to give the best to those best fitted to make use of it. In other words, it is trying to select and prepare leaders.

Only upon a superficial view does this appear to be undemocratic. The democratic test should apply to the method of selection only. That is, men or women should be admitted regardless of wealth, social standing, or connections. They should be selected by test of fitness to profit by higher education, and this test should be uncompromising. The democracy of merit is the democracy to be applied, and for the purpose of giving what democracy must somehow contrive to find and perfect, a competent leadership.

LABOR LEARNING ECONOMICS.

Some months ago, when announcement was made of the opening of a coöperative factory by the Glove Workers' union, THE TRIBUNE welcomed it as a practical school of economics and business methods from which the members of the union participating could not fail to learn valuable lessons.

Now we are informed the venture has declared a dividend of 6 per cent. Fine! The glove workers have been impressed by the fact that capital is essential to a successful business enterprise. They know that they could no more operate it without capital than they could operate it without labor. By declaring a dividend they acknowledge that such capital is as rightfully entitled to reward as is the labor which uses it.

Even better Miss Agnes Nestor of the Women's Trade Union league, elated at the success of the enterprise, says, "Good business management is the key." That is a significant statement from a trades union leader.

The workers have learned that one can get out of a business only what is put into it, in capital, in labor, and in business management, which means brains. Hereafter, we believe, the workers in touch with this experiment and their friends will have greater sympathy and tolerance for both capital and business management. Each contributes its part to success and each is entitled to its share in the reward.

The coöperative factory, therefore, has been a success in more ways than one. We wish it continued success. As the results of such experiments multiply, labor's understanding of the problems of capital and management will improve, to the great advantage of all.

Editorial of the Day

THINK IT ALL OVER.

[The Breeders' Gazette.]

There is such a thing as a "state of mind" aggravating and exaggerating real troubles to a point where mental depression is a real hindrance to recuperation.

The Gazette warns farmers in particular against overindulgence in what is sometimes called self-pity. It is a bad disease. Do not give way to it if you can possibly avoid it. Farmers generally have no means of knowing the depressed condition of our manufacturing industries. They have no way of knowing how hard business men in great centers of population have been hit. The farmer who fancies that he has got the whole charge, and both barrels at that, is therefore laboring under a delusion. If farmers knew the load that thousands of business men and hundreds of commercial banks are carrying today it might help them to realize that the farmer is not the only sufferer.

You often hear farmers say "I don't want my boys to have anything to do with farming. They can fit themselves for any other business they like." And so we see farmers' sons in the universities being educated to be engineers and everything but farmers. How many engineers are making a living today? How many are out of jobs? Plenty, we should say. Their business is in no better shape just now than is the farmer's, but just because farming is temporarily in distress a lot of folk talk about its never coming back; talk as if any other line of work is sure to give better returns for the future. Is this reasonable? Is it logical? It it sensible? Or is it just the reaction of minds depressed by recent losses?

It is a time for sane thinking, not for giving way to impulse. A little steadiness, a lot of patience, and now and then a smile, will help.

Walking home with mother
At the twilight hour,
We love to race each other
'Fore the shadows lower.

We run a little, walk a bit,
Then rest upon a stone;
A big white stone, with sunset lit;
Then run again towards home.

Sometimes the breeze goes whisking by,
Sometimes the moon comes up;
In deepest grass we love to lie,
Then hurry home to sup.

There are fairies all the way
At the twilight hour;
'Tis the sweetest time o' day

SHE THREW HERSELF AT HIS FEET.
Or
LOVE IN THE SHOE DEPARTMENT.

[From the Fort Smith, Ark., Southwest American.]

This marriage is the culmination of a most unusual romance, dating back to the patriotic days immediately following the war when the lucky man returned from the submarine infected waters about the battlefields of France to be given a position with the Poe-Herden Shoe company, where he met and was swept away by the undying devotion of the bride, who was an employé of the same firm. The passing days from that time on, during which they were constantly in each others' thoughts, drew them closer and closer together in the sacred bonds of true love until they were rewarded by this wedding, which has been the one and only thought of each since they first met. This fallacy, foist upon me at a tender age, fired me with zealous resolve to give truth every possible chance to rise, and I immediately embarked on a truth crushing career. THE DECEMBER OF DRINK.

(With apologies to Aborigine.)

Rumor came over the telephone yesterday that sneering revenue agents lurked near my favorite bar, and I hurried from the office to drown my protest, but these things were there before me, and the oldest and only bottled in bond was a prisoner. The scowl on the bartender's face beyond the mahogany was as black against his white apron as charcoal burnt upon a white oak barrel, the cracker crumbled in my hands, withered under the aridness of this sudden Sahara, the lonely and trembling habitué at the margin of the bar drooped heavily, and, in his sigh, I thought I heard him crying like Uncle Ebenezer over his dead mule. A flock of dry blackbirds restless and full of evil flew through the door, and high on a chair ransacking the top of a cupboard was the chief mourner, a sleuth buzzard who raised and lowered dusty, empty jugs as an undertaker raises and lowers his new silk hat while waiting outside the church for the preacher to get through. Across the dreary, smitten street came the gray Norns, newspaper photographers and reporters, chanting a low dirge, and I understand now what the governor of North Carolina meant when he said to the governor of South Carolina, "It's a long time between drinks!" VOLTAIRE.

BUT WHY BE OVERFASTIDIOUS?

[Editorial in the Sioux Falls, S. D., Leader.]

According to etiquette, it is against propriety to pass food articles at the table with one's hands. Now, by what law of table manners is it considered proper for one to take steaming pancakes in his own fingers and deposit them on the plate intended for some one else? Yet it is certainly less objectionable for one to pass bread that way than hot griddle cakes on which he generally leaves the impress of his fingers. BUCKWHEAT.

THOUSANDS of bathers romped in Lake Michigan yesterday and five train loads of excursionists arrived from southern California to escape the dread rigors of their climate in the glorious sunshine of January in Chicago. R. H. L.

CROUPY CHILDREN.

O. R. F. writes: "1. Are any children naturally croupy? If so, what can be done to prevent attack?

"2. What treatment gives quickest and surest relief? Yesterday evening our 4 year old boy had a croupy cough when put to bed. He suffered with croup practically all night, in spite of our efforts to give relief by filling the room with fumes of menthol crystals. It was necessary twice to resort to vomiting to afford temporary relief."

REPLY.

1. Yes. Assuming that you know the frequency with which diphtheria is mistaken for croup, and that you are dealing with a child subject to frequent attacks of croup—in fact, is liable to develop croup with any ordinary cold—I will attempt to answer the questions that trouble you.

Perhaps all of the children in your family are that way. It is a common occurrence for a child to play around a little during the day while it has a cough and cold, and then, toward night, to begin "to croup."

Rickety children are prone to have a tendency to croup. Likewise, children who have what is known as the spasmophilic diathesis are prone to croup.

There is an electric test which shows which children belong in this group even before they have any convulsions or croup or any other outspoken symptoms.

Located in the neck, not far from the thyroid, are several small glands called parathyroids, which are supposed by some to be at fault in this disorder. Others think the thymus gland responsible. A chemical theory is to the effect that children of this group need lime. They do well on milk for one reason, because it contains an abundance of lime.

In addition, they are benefited by taking some preparation of lime rather steadily, especially during the season for colds.

Perhaps some day we may know enough to use some ductless gland with them intelligently.

To give immediate relief, sirup of ipecac is the sovereign remedy. Purgatives and cough medicines have a place in treatment. In a few cases inhalations of steam under a tent may be advised by the physician.

2. As a rule, mothers get in the habit of treating their croupy children themselves. They give some ipecac and then some oil. Keep them warm and comfortable and let it go at that.

It is well for them to know that croupy children need more than other children to play in the fresh air and sunshine, and most of them need to take some form of lime.

OIL FOR LEPROSY.

J. D. N. writes: "What is the name of the oil that cured leprosy, and can you tell me where I can get some?"

REPLY.

Chaulmoogra oil.

You can get it from any well stocked drug store. However, it is probable that the refined oil used in Hawaii is not yet on the market.

CURE FOR CHILBLAINS.

Mrs. C. E. H. writes: "I have been a great sufferer for the last twelve years with chilblains, and have tried a great many remedies without any permanent relief.

"Is there any cure or relief? Also, have general health conditions and blood any bearing on the cause or relief of chilblains? My case seems to be much worse than the majority, and does not respond to any treatment thus far.

"Of the different things which I have tried, iodine gives the best results, but only in a moderate way. There are days when it is impossible for me to put on shoes, and very difficult for me to be on my feet."

REPLY.

Those with obstinate tendency to chilblains should remember the lessons taught by the winters in Flanders.

The soldiers learned to grease their feet well. The best grease for the purpose was fish oil, though all greases were good. They used it lavishly. The feet were washed frequently. Socks were kept as clean as possible.

Shoes were large, roomy, and waterproof. Socks were warm and loose. Garments were made to fit snugly or to overlap at all places where air and heat leak out in clothing built in the ordinary way.

Painting with iodine is a method widely used and has many advocates.

Hutchinson advises washing the feet once or twice a day in warm water, followed by gentle friction with spirits of camphor, and, after drying, dusting with one part salicylate of bismuth to nine parts starch.

General health and blood conditions have no bearing on the tendency to chilblains except this: The condition is one of the vasomotor disorders. That is, it is a disorder of the nerves which distribute the blood to different parts of the body.

The adrenal glands have much to do with these conditions, but we do not know enough about the adrenal glands and vasomotor troubles to make use of the information practically.

SEND STAMPED ENVELOPE.

Mrs. A. K. writes: "Would you please tell me a sure cure for cramps and bearing down pains which I have every month, without having to undergo an operation or childbirth. I suffer that way every month and have done so for three years. Once in a while it is so mild I hardly pay any attention to it at all."

REPLY.

Send a stamped, addressed envelope for "Personal Hygiene for Women."

BOTH ARE FATTENING.

W. T. I. writes: "1. Is bread made from whole wheat flour fattening?

"2. Are Post toasties, eaten without sugar and milk, fattening?"

REPLY.

1. It is.
2. Yes.

OR HELP WITH THE DISHES.

J. W. W. writes: "Will you please tell me why it is, after eating my evening meal, I am so sleepy that I cannot read the evening paper without falling to sleep?"

REPLY.

Maybe your paper is not sprightly enough, or maybe you read the editorials. If so, stick to the sports page and this column. Get your wife to let you off for half an hour of bowling. Skating would be even better.

MAY BE BOSS' GRAMMAR.

M. F. writes: "I have been a dictaphone operator for the last two years. About four months ago I had an earache which lasted for about a week. A few days ago I had another severe earache, which lasted one day, but there is a continual roaring sound in my ears ever since. Also have a slight headache due to same. Do you think that it is due to the dictaphone?

REPLY.

No.

"UNITED STATES GRAIN GROWERS, INC."

Silver Creek, Neb., Jan. 13.—It is true, as reported in the newspapers, that the Farmers' union state convention, in session in Omaha, did, on Jan. 11, adopt a resolution indorsing the United States Grain Growers, Inc. But it is also true that the vote was close, and in my opinion—and I was a delegate in the convention—if the chairman had not arbitrarily interfered to prevent discussion the motion to adopt would have been defeated.

It should be noted, however, and fully understood, that in so doing the Farmers' union of Nebraska placed itself in open opposition to, if not even in open rebellion against, our national organization, which at Topeka, Kas., last November not only did not indorse the United States Grain Growers, Inc., but actually condemned that pretentious organization by adopting the report of their national lecturer, W. C. Lansdon of Kansas, in which occurs the following passage as taken from the published official report of the work of the convention:

"The United States Grain Growers, Inc., is the most ambitious and aspiring of all the recent coöperative attempts. Its promoters proposed to handle all the wheat produced in this country. They had a great deal to say about the desirability of orderly marketing and the stabilization of prices, but when their plans finally took concrete form they included no workable or enforceable provisions to secure these very desirable results, or to prevent speculation. Their contract or agreement offers so many options so conflictive in principle to member growers that any real control over the flow of wheat to the markets or any influence on either local or world prices is impossible, no matter what volume of production may be organized."

Since Mr. Lansdon is continually traveling all over the country in the interest of the farmers, and has every opportunity of knowing the facts, his opinion of the United States Grain Growers, Inc., is properly to be considered of supreme importance. CHARLES WOOSTER.

WE'RE ENTIRELY IN FAVOR OF IT.

Benton, Ill., Jan. 9.—I have been a constant reader of THE TRIBUNE for more than ten years, and have always thought you tried to be fair, but your editorial on "The Check Off" has left me in doubt. I live in Franklin county, the greatest coal producer in Illinois, and I believe I am fairly conversant with conditions in the mining industry.

In the first place, the union existed prior to the check off, and could undoubtedly do so again, but it would be a great inconvenience. We regard it merely as an agreement between miner and operator for the convenience of both, and is not intended as a conspiracy against any one. Only a mind warped by prejudice can so construe it.

You complain that there are too many miners. Who is to blame? What would have been your attitude if the miners had insisted on restricting their numbers? If the mines had not been sunk, no miners would have been required.

Your idea seems to be to so reduce wages that enough men will be forced to find other occupations to automatically close part of the mines. Why not so reduce coal prices that part of the operators will have to go out of business? W. M. SOMMA.

HENRY FORD'S INSPIRATION.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—I see Henry Ford and Dr. Frank Crane claim to have acquired most of their erudition from McGuffey's readers. This may guide our teachers in constructing the new textbooks for the public schools of Chicago. Many of McGuffey's moral readings are full of action, making them easy to remember. Take the story of "The Kindhearted Boy," in the fourth reader. I quote from memory:

"As George Dooit was going along the road one day on an errand, he saw a starving dog. He revived the animal with a sandwich from his lunch, and, continuing on his way, a stranded sailor hove into sight. George donated another sandwich to the destitute mariner, and directed him to a nearby ocean. A little farther on George heard loud shrieks from a pool beside the road. Running toward it, he discovered that a blind man had dropped in. With the assistance of a stick, George managed to fish out the sightless tourist, just as he came up for air for the last time. George finished his trip without further interruptions, except that he saved a horse's life with a timely drink. On his way home George got lost in the woods, and was starving to death, when the dog he had assisted dashed up with a bag of doughnuts. As George was eating, and wondering whether the doughnut or the holes in them were made first, two robbers attacked him. The brave dog grabbed one of them by the pants, while the blind man and the sailor, who happened to be passing, rushed up and massacred the other. George thanked them heartily, and said he would invite them to his home, only he didn't know where it was. Just then the horse George had saved dropped in on the party, and as he knew George's address, he took all hands there on his back. George's parents were much interested in his adventures, and the local paper got out an extra about them. That is how Prof. McGuffey came to hear the story of them and put it in his fourth reader." J. TIERNEY.

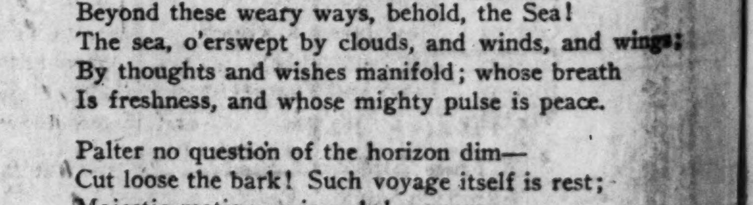
A REFERENDUM ON PROHIBITION.

Chicago, Jan. 17.—In THE TRIBUNE'S effort to make the country legally "wet" again you conduct a post-mortem on Barleycorn and find that the majority of Chicago people are "wet." This is not news. There is nothing in your post-mortem to show that the sentiment of the country is changing.

If you are going to put the country "wet" again by the action of cities you had better start by showing that some of the cities that voted "dry" would now vote "wet."

Send your Inquiring Reporter to Des Moines, Rockford, or Kokomo, cities that gave "dry" majorities. While there, have them interview as many women as men. Women are voters now, and they have opinions on the "wet" and "dry" question. E. E. COVERT.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW



THALASSA! THALASSA!

By Brownlee Brown.

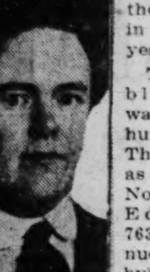
I stand upon the summit of my life;
Behind, the camp, the court, the field, the grove,
The battle, and the burden: vast, afar
Beyond these weary ways, behold, the Sea!
The sea, o'erswept by clouds, and winds, and wings;
By thoughts and wishes manifold; whose breath
Is freshness, and whose mighty pulse is peace.

Palter no question of the horizon dim—
Cut loose the bark! Such voyage itself is rest;
Majestic motion, unimpeded scope,
A widening heaven, a current without care,
Eternity! Deliverance, promise, course,
Time tired souls salute thee from the shore.

6 SAFEBLOWERS SEIZED; CHARGED WITH 50 CRIMES

Police Also Record Theft of $1,750 Pay Roll.

The arrest of a gang of safeblowers, a $1,750 pay roll robbery, and the capture of a long wanted money order passer were the main events in police circles yesterday.



HAROLD L. WARD. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

The six safeblowers are wanted for half a hundred crimes. They are: Thomas O'Neil, 3237 Normal avenue; Edward Piper, 7635 Drexel avenue; Martin (Dobby) McLaughlin, 6202 South Racine avenue; Frank (Butch) Zahner, 2835 Emerald avenue; Emil Kanzek, 8218 Calumet avenue, and Joseph Wiedersburg, 3045 South Canal street. They will be specifically booked today on charges of twelve safe crackings and sixteen burglaries. Nearly all have police records.

Thugs Use Blackjack.

Harold L. Ward, cashier of the Sterling Electroplating company, 1517 Carroll avenue, went to the bank yesterday, as is his Saturday custom, to get the firm's $1,750 pay roll. As he was entering the hallway of his firm's offices on his return, two men and a blackjack met him. The robbers and the $1,750 escaped.

C. D. Smith, 50 years old, whose home is said to be in Burlingame, Kan., wandered along State street yesterday with a handful of bogus money orders. Police know he cashed four and think there's more. They are holding him for federal authorities, who say they've wanted him for a long time.

J. W. Kelso, 3111 Franklin boulevard, a salesman intended to give a party at his home. He stopped downtown for a load of groceries. Four armed boys stopped his automobile at 20th street and Canalport avenue. He was robbed of his watch and $14 and then thrown out. His groceries followed him. The last to arrive was a case of salad dressing. The case broke.

Four Colored Men Get $400.

Abraham Katz runs a delicatessen store at 5300 Indiana avenue. Four armed colored men. $400 missing.

John Schiff, 1915 Washburn avenue, escorted Miss Fanny Abraham, 1533 Elbourn avenue, home. Two armed men stopped them. They got $1 from Schiff and $140 in jewelry from Miss Abraham.

Anton Golowadic, 1832 Elbourn avenue, is mourning $15—three men in an automobile.

Three others, believed to be bandits, were arrested by West Chicago avenue police after a dozen shots were fired. They are held.

John Kendrick Bangs

Born May 27, 1862. Died Jan. 21, 1922

KENDRICK BANGS, NOTED AMERICAN HUMORIST, DEAD

End Comes in Atlantic City Hospital.

Atlantic City, Jan. 21.—[Special.]—John Kendrick Bangs, the author, died today in the city hospital following a second operation for an intestinal disorder. Mrs. Bangs and the author's three sons were with him when death came.

Mr. Bangs was taken ill several weeks ago and went to the hospital on Jan. 1. An operation was performed for a malignant growth, but, because of the nature of the disease, it was not possible to complete the operation at that time. He grew steadily worse and about two weeks ago it was not expected that he would live.

Hopeful Till the End.

But the humor which made his books so well known came to his aid, and he never lost his cheerfulness. He buoyed up Mrs. Bangs by his optimism, and for the last four days had showed continued improvement, much to his physicians' amazement. It was found, however, another operation would be necessary, and after a consultation today of physicians, Mrs. Bangs consented to the operation, and it was begun at 12:30 o'clock. After the effects of the anaesthetics wore off Mr. Bangs regained consciousness for a time, recognized his wife and sons and smiled at them, then gradually weakened and died.

PROLIFIC AND POPULAR.

John Kendrick Bangs, famous for more than a quarter of a century as a humorist and man of letters, came of a distinguished American family. His father was a noted New York lawyer and his grandfather, Nathan Bangs, the third president of Wesleyan university, had a wide reputation as a Methodist preacher and ecclesiastical writer.

He was born on May 27, 1862, and was educated at Columbia. He was graduated in 1883 with the degree of Ph. B., then studied a year in Columbia Law school and in 1884 became associate editor of Life. In 1888 he became a member of the staff of Harper's Monthly as editor of the "Drawer." Subsequently he served as editor of Harper's Weekly, the Metropolitan Magazine, and Puck.

Mr. Bangs was a prolific writer of poetry as well as author of a number of dramatic and musical plays. His best known book probably was "A Houseboat on the Styx."

PALDINI SLAYER SHOWN FREED ON 'BLACKLIST' BOND

Surety on Bail of Dozen Fugitives.

Abundant evidence that widows of heroic policemen no longer are dependent upon public charity but are to be recognized officially was forthcoming yesterday when it was announced that the widow and family of Sergt. Charles Paldina will receive $5,000 from the citizens' committee, $110 per month from the pension fund, and another $5,000 from an appropriation now under way in the city council.

NICK CERCELLA.

Investigation by the Chicago crime commission yesterday revealed that Louis Asher, blacklisted professional bondsman, who admitted receiving $1,800 for effecting the release on bonds of "Eddie" Newman, alias Ginsberg, had been on sixty-six bonds in the Criminal court within the last three years, twelve of which were declared forfeited.

Newman, released last July on bonds of $10,000, and declared a fugitive from justice when he failed to appear for trial in December, Thursday shot and killed Sergt. Charles Paldini of the detective bureau, rated as one of the bravest and most efficient members of the police force. Newman himself was killed by the sergeant in the pistol duel.

Evils of Bonding System.

The case of Newman was cited by Henry Barrett Chamberlin, operating director of the crime commission, as an example of how professional criminals are able to provide bonds which permit them to rob and murder while awaiting trial.

The case of Asher was cited as an example of how bondsmen are able to effect the release of criminals despite the fact they have been blacklisted time and again on charges of making false schedules and misstatements and exerting political influence to free prisoners.

In 1920 Charles O'Malley, robber, gunman, and burglar, was released on bail through the efforts of Asher. While denying that he was a professional, Asher admitted when O'Malley's bond was declared forfeited that he had received $400 for his services. The bond in that case was $21,000. Asher listed the same building he scheduled for the bond of Newman.

On Bond Despite Black List.

Newman was indicted last February for the robbery of the Klein Loan bank, 502 South Halsted street, and held in bonds of $20,000. Later his bonds were lowered to $10,000 by Judge Joseph David. Then Asher, despite his previous record, was allowed to go on his bond. Judge McKinley on Dec. 17 declared the bond forfeited.

It was while searching for Newman on a capias issued by Judge McKinley that Sergt. Paldini was shot. Immediately after the shooting squads of police started a hunt for the four companions of Newman. More than 300 suspects were seized and questioned, among them Nick Cercella, or Nickel dene, who was identified as one of the Newman party. It was necessary at one time to call out extra policemen to quell a riot begun by friends of the suspects held at the Maxwell street station.

$10,000 for Family.

It was announced yesterday that there will be $10,000, together with a monthly allowance of $110, available for the support of Sergt. Paldini's family. He has a wife and three children. His wife is at present in an asylum for the insane.

Of this sum $5,000 will come from the citizens' fund and $5,000 from the municipal insurance fund for the aid of the families of policemen and firemen who are killed in line of duty. The $110 monthly will be paid from the policeman's annuity and benefit fund. Sergt. Paldini did not belong to the Policemen's Benevolent association.

While the insurance plan has not yet been passed by the council, aldermen yesterday said it has been favorably recommended by the finance committee.

GIRL DID A MAN'S WORK

TINA HEISHMAN.

DOROTHY HEISHMAN.

Princeton, Ind., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Tina Heishman, 17 and pretty, told on the witness stand in the Circuit court how she did a man's work in the National Rolling mill at Vincennes, from January to Sept. 23, 1920, when her health broke down. She was then 15, she said.

The girl is suing the company for $50,000 damages because of her alleged condition. Working beside a man employé, she handled pieces of hot iron weighing from 50 to 200 pounds. When he quit at 3:15 in the afternoon Tina had to carry water and work at the faggot bench in the yard, she said.

She testified she lived with her crippled 14 year old sister, Dorothy, in a one room home. She was too tired ever to go out evenings, she said.

TWO TAKE POISON FOR LOVE OF MAN; ONE IS HIS WIFE

The possibility that love for the same man may have caused two women, one his wife, to seek death by drinking poison was revealed yesterday when Mrs. Anna Powers, 839 Lake street, Oak Park, wife of Harry Powers, former Oak Park policeman, was taken to the West Suburban hospital after she had called the police for help.

Dr. John Tope, who gave first aid, said Mrs. Powers was suffering from hysteria. At the hospital last night, when asked if Mrs. Powers was poisoned, the nurse in attendance said, "I think she is."

Several days ago Lillian Brown of Aurora attempted suicide by drinking poison in a loop department store. She was taken to the county hospital. Yesterday, it is said, Mrs. Powers visited her. Both women wept as they talked. Miss Brown, it is reported, said it was her love for the former Oak Park policeman that caused her to seek death.

Mrs. Powers returned to Oak Park. and shortly afterwards the police were called to take her to the hospital.

Elizabeth Claflin Low Divorces Seth Low's Kin

White Plains, N. Y., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—A decree of divorce was granted today to Mrs. Elizabeth Claflin Low, daughter of John Claflin, dry goods pioneer, from Abbot Augustus Low nephew of Ex-Mayor Seth Low of New York, by Supreme Court Justice Young. Details of a society fishing expedition into the Adirondacks formed the principal testimony for Mrs. Low.

URGE U. S. RAIL BOARD AS COURT OF LAST RESORT

Roads Would Settle Own Disputes.

The United States railroad labor board will soon be functioning only as a court of last resort, as far as controversies between carriers and the four transportation brotherhoods are concerned, if expected support by the unions is given a proposal advocated yesterday at a meeting of the Association of Railway Executives in the Blackstone hotel.

Members of the association, representing virtually every road in the country, adopted a resolution approving of a plan to settle train service labor disputes through regional conferences. The proposal, which originated with the brotherhood leaders, represents the first fruit of the recent Washington conferences presided over by Secretary Hoover and attended by brotherhood chiefs and railway officials.

The resolution indicated the aim of the railway chiefs is "a fair effort to compose and adjust all points now at issue, no restrictions to be imposed upon the consideration of any and all questions of wages and rules governing working conditions."

In other words, the roads will continue to press their demands for an additional 10 per cent wage reduction and to abolish working rules they consider unfair.

If the proposed plan is given effect, conference committees representing the carriers and the train service employés will undertake to settle all disputes. If they fail, the issue will, as now, come before the railroad labor board.

There would be at least three territories—eastern, southeastern and western, as defined by the interstate commerce commission—and there may be subdivisions of these. The resolution does not bind railways to join in these conferences, reserving for each the privilege of dealing direct with its employés.

Thomas De Witt Cuyler, chairman, of the Association of Railway Executives, said adoption of the plan would mark a partial return to pre-war methods of disposing of disputes.

WEST ASSURES EAST PATRIOTISM IS NATION-WIDE

Senator Calms Fear Held in Weaker Section.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—The west has risen to power in congress, but the west does not intend to take advantage of other sections of the country in shaping legislation, according to Senator McCumber of North Dakota, whose succession to the late Senator Penrose as chairman of the senate finance committee is being viewed with alarm in the east.

"In reading some of the eastern press comments pertaining to the finance committee, I have been somewhat surprised at the expression of fear sometimes indicated that the increasing membership of that committee from the western section of the country, and the increasing activities of western senators in shaping legislation, might possibly endanger the stability of the country and weaken the principle of protection to our American industries, a policy upon which depend in a great degree the prosperity of the people and the consequent stability of our institutions," said Senator McCumber today.

Interests Are Identical.

"This fear seems to be based upon the assumption that there are some radical differences between the interests of the east and those of the west. I fail to recognize any differences. Whatever may be the provincial ideas of some few of the people of either section, the great mass of thinking persons know that their interests are concurrent. We are one country and one people. The vitalizing blood of commerce must flow with equal freedom through the whole body politics. It is impossible that one side of it should be vitalic and the other side anemic at the same time.

"We are a big country, and it is a long distance from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We of the west for many years have been trying to adjust our lenses to enable us to see and understand the eastern situation. From what I have read of late in some of our metropolitan dailies of the Atlantic states, I think we may be excused if we mildly suggest to some of them that they so adjust their optics as to see not only over the Alleghenies but also that vast empire watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries, and that further region reaching to our Pacific coast.

Need Broad Minded Men.

"We not only need in the United States congressmen who have a reasonable acquaintance with the industries of each and every part of this country, its finances and its commerce, from Boston to Portland and from Canada to the gulf—men who can sympathize with the necessities and the aspirations of every section—but I think I can say with equal candor we need an American press that will be equally broad and sympathetic in its views.

"Whatever may be urged in favor of a free trade policy had we built our national economic structure on that foundation, I think no right thinking man can fail to understand that a change of that policy today would practically destroy every industry in the United States and bring about a catastrophe the miseries from which would be beyond description.

Stands for Protection.

"So, come what will, we must maintain the protective policy in this country. But we must maintain it as a national policy and not as a sectional one. While it is impossible, by reason of varying conditions, to give every commodity exactly the same degree of protection, we should measure up to that standard just as nearly as we can.

"It is worse than a mistake to assume that the average westerner is not at heart a protectionist. I think I am well within the bounds of accuracy when I say that the percentage of believers in that doctrine is considerably greater in the west than in any other section of the country, certainly far greater than in the Empire state of New York.

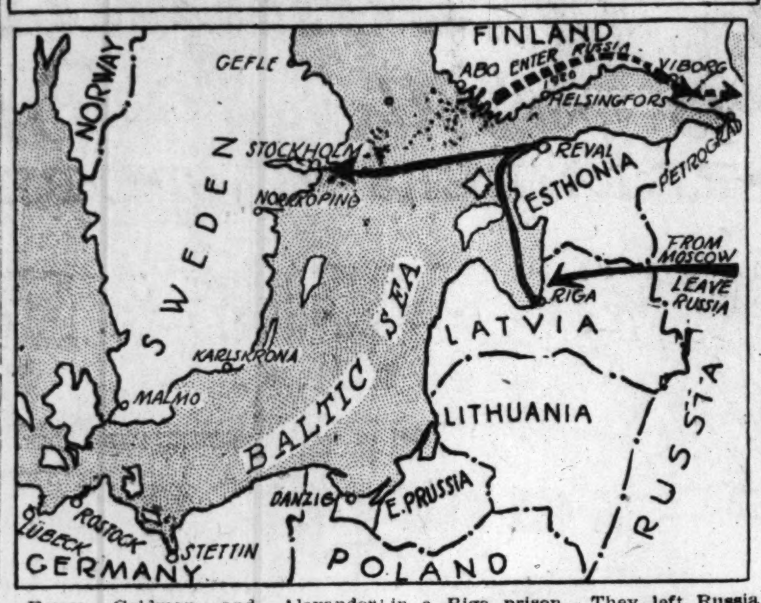
Favors Refunding Foreign Debt.

"The Republican party is the party of protection. While no policy can with magic touch immediately revive paralyzed world, I am certain we can greatly accelerate our industrial convalescence by directing our energies along national and not along sectional lines."

Senator McCumber said if the foreign loan refunding bill and soldiers' bonus bill were passed there would be "no difficulty in making one hand wash the other."

"We should also remember that our principal allies loaned to their allies a greater sum than we loaned them, and they have as yet received neither interest nor principal," he continued. "While we should have funded every cent that is due us, we should be most liberal in the terms of payment. We ought not to play the role of Shylock in dealing with our poverty-stricken debtors."

STRANDED IN SWEDEN



Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman are stranded in Sweden. The Swedes won't let them stay and no one else will take them in. If they can't get away by next Wednesday they may have to go to jail. Before coming to Sweden they spent the ten days beyond the allotted time in Latvia in a Riga prison. They left Russia hoping to get passage to America, but this country would not take them back and other nations, following suit, shut their doors against them. The map shows the path they entered Russia by in 1920 and their wanderings since leaving.

U. S. RECEIPTS TO BALANCE OUTGO, MADDEN AVERS

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Government expenditures will not be permitted to exceed government income during the coming fiscal year. Representative Madden, Chicago, chairman of the appropriations committee, made this prediction today, although estimates of expenditures for the fiscal year, which begins July 1, as transmitted to congress last month, showed expenditures would exceed the receipts by $167,500,000.

Although only four of the regular annual appropriation bills have been reported to the house from the appropriations committee, the estimates for those bills have been cut $53,000,000, and there are eight more bills to come. If the average reductions are merely kept up the excess of expenditures over receipts would be wiped out.

But it is the plan of the appropriations committee to cut the estimates for the navy alone as much as the expenditures would exceed the federal receipts. Kelley [Mich.], chairman of the subcommittee handling naval appropriations, has stated that the expenditures on the navy during the next fiscal year will be nearly $200,000,000 less than they were this year.

When Charles G. Dawes, budget director, submitted to congress his figures for the next fiscal year he stated that expenditures and receipts could be balanced in two years. The appropriations committee decided that it would make them balance during the next year and immediately began slicing the appropriations approved by the budget director.

Twelve million dollars was lopped off the appropriations for the treasury department, $25,000,000 from the post-office department, $10,000,000 from the independent government establishments bill, and $6,000,000 from the District of Columbia bill.

Undoubtedly the senate will attempt to restore some of the items stricken out, but Mr. Madden and all committee members are confident congress will kept its expenditures within receipts.

GIANT DOPE RING BARED BY DEATH OF GIRL IN BERTH

New York, Jan. 21.—The workings of a Montreal-Boston-New York whisky and drug smuggling ring were disclosed by Deputy Police Commissioner Carleton Simon tonight following the detention of Mrs. Frances Bruce, who, herself unconscious, arrived here in a Pullman berth beside the body of Mrs. Dorothy Wardwell.

The two were discovered by a porter this morning after the Montreal express had pulled into its terminal. At Bellevue hospital Mrs. Bruce said her name was "Mrs. Pumbroke" and that with her companion, who was about 21, had come from Montreal after Mrs. Wardwell had been ordered deported.

She admitted she had been carrying drugs and whisky from Boston to New York for several months, while her companion had worked on the Montreal end of the illicit traffic.

It was Mrs. Wardwell, she said, who provided the narcotic which caused her own death. Accustomed only to diluted drugs, she said, both soon lost consciousness.

(A Business Editorial)

ARE YOU BORED?

You are a salesman. What is your business psychology?

A customer has just come in and told you that the article she received yesterday is a foot too long for the space. You have no other to fit, so the firm has to send for it. Not your fault, yet the time and sale are both lost.

You fidget and are disgruntled—would like to ask the customer why she did not measure the space first, etc.

What of it?

You are a credit man. What is your business psychology?

You have just asked a prospective customer for information which is expected to justify a thirty day credit. He is not a business man and shows that he is provoked.

What of it?

A thousand examples might be cited. You may not know it, but if the establishment you are working for is successful, multitudes of such instances have been met in ways you perchance know nothing about. The head of the establishment encounters such things every day. Is he bored? Perhaps.

What does he do?

He has learned to take it all like a philosopher. He displays neither annoyance nor business boredom. He recognizes the inevitable—makes the best of it.

The philosophy of good salesmanship—of a good credit man—is made up of a compound of divination, cheerfulness, self-control and wisdom.

SECRET CHINA PACTS BARRED BY ROOT PLAN

Peking to Make Public Treaties.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—The nine power committee on the far east agreed today to the showdown on treaties and commitments with China, proposed by Secretary Hughes, and adopted a resolution offered by Mr. Elihu Root, the American delegate, pledging the signatory nations not to support any agreements by their nationals in the future designed to create spheres of influence or exclusive opportunities in China.

For her part China agreed to make public contracts and treaties with other nationals affecting her affairs which are in her possession.

The original resolutions were amended to eliminate private contracts concluded by private firms and individuals with the Chinese government or Chinese local authorities, the Japanese and British delegations having insisted that it would be impracticable, their respective governments having no laws compelling the recording of such contracts.

Cuts Off Chinese Troops.

The conference committee on far eastern affairs, in adopting a resolution declaring that China should reduce its armed forces, has served notice until the system of military dictatorship is abolished China cannot hope to improve her condition materially.

The subordination and subserviency of the Chinese government to provincial military despots, who make and unmake cabinets at will and who divert to their own pockets fully half of the national revenues, have been emphasized by several spokesmen in the conference.

China Weary of Brigands.

The Chinese delegation itself has acquiesced in the denunciation by the conference of the military overlordship of the nation, having assisted in the drafting of the military economy resolution.

It is understood that internal pressure will be brought to bear upon China after the adjournment of the conference to effect the dismissal of the hordes or Chinese "soldiers," serving under the banners of military dictators scattered throughout the empire and maintained solely to promote the ambitions of their chiefs to carry on civil war, and who are responsible more than any other cause for the political disorganization and sectionalism of China.

KISSES HUSBAND GOOD-BY; FALLS DYING OF POISON

Despondency over the death of her brother six months ago is believed by the police to have caused the suicide yesterday of Mrs. Elizabeth Orthman, 33 years old, 2563 West Washington boulevard, wife of Sergt. William Orthman of the Desplaines street station.

When Sergt. Orthman returned from the station in the morning his wife greeted him at the door.

"Let me kiss you good-by, Bill," she said, according to Sergt. Orthman.

"What is the matter?" he asked.

"I couldn't stand it any longer," Mrs. Orthman said. "I've taken poison."

She fell unconscious in his arms as he rushed to the telephone. Mrs. Orthman died in the Midwest hospital.

Mrs. Bertha Fitzgerald, who lives on the first floor at the same address, said Mrs. Orthman often told her of her grief over the death of her brother.

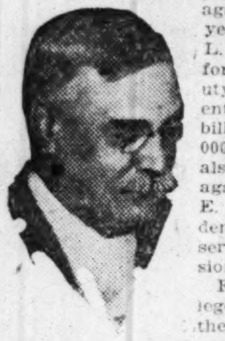
FUNKHOUSER SUES FOR HIS SALARY AS SEQUEL TO OUSTING

Suit for the recovery of $15,000 which, he claims, is due him in back pay, was filed against the city yesterday by M. L. C. Funkhouser, former second deputy superintendent of police. A bill claiming $10,000 more was also filed by him against Charles E. Frazier, president of the civil service commission.



MAJ. FUNKHOUSER

Funkhouser alleges he passed the civil service examination and was appointed to the office March 22, 1913, and served continuously until May 25, 1918. On July 31, 1918, an order was entered by the commission to discharge him, he states. Maj. Funkhouser fought the order to the Supreme court, where he won. He declares he was not paid from May 24, 1918, to Dec. 31, 1920.

"TAKE RISKS FOR PEACE," PLEA OF LLOYD GEORGE

LONDON, Jan. 21.—[By the Associated Press.]—An appeal to the nations to establish a real peace by which international confidence and world trade might be restored was made by Prime Minister Lloyd George in a speech before the National liberal conference here today. He lauded the achievements of the Washington conference, declaring it had played an especially notable part in restoring the understanding between Great Britain and the United States and said the task of the coming Genoa economic conference, "would be to end the constant wars and rumors of wars."

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE.

Mr. Lloyd George said he looked to the Genoa gathering to restore peace in the east and he pleaded for a reduction in the cost of armament."

"Nations must be prepared to take risks for peace," he declared.

Sees Contented Ireland at Hand.

Much of his speech dealt with domestic economics and politics. As was expected, he declared for continuation of an alliance of all elements of the coalition government in order to insure the fullest measure of coöperation in the work of European reconstruction and home economics.

Mr. Lloyd George dealt at some length with the Irish settlement, pointing out difficulties which must still be met before the Irish Free State can be completely set up.

"But that good sense which the Irish people have demonstrated so clearly in recent discussions," he added, "will enable them to triumph over all these difficulties and to develop a prosperous and contented Ireland, which will take high rank among the free nations constituting the British empire."

U. S.-British Hold Peace Key.

Discussing the Washington conference, he said: "The peace of the world largely depends upon good understanding between the United States and ourselves. The conference has done more than anything else to restore that understanding."

With reference to German reparations, he said:

"I am one of those who think Germany ought not to be let off from payment, but Germany is suffering from exhaustion, like other nations, and delay is inevitable. The sooner, however, a settlement is reached the better."

HIGH TAXES ON INHERITANCES AND GIFTS URGED

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Bills increasing taxes on gifts and on inheritances were introduced in the house today by Repreesntative Frear of Wisconsin.

"During hearings before the ways and means committee Secretary of the Treasury Mellon stated that among the means taken to avoid payment of higher surtaxes were investment in tax free securities and by distribution of property or gifts, thereby avoiding the estate tax," Mr. Frear said. "The committee has before it a proposal to pass a constitutional amendment making all government and state securities taxable. On this proposal every witness before the committee has favored such amendment. The same unanimity of sentiment may be expected in favor of a gift tax that can be imposed without any constitutional amendment."

The bill increasing taxes on gifts proposes a graduated scale running from 1 per cent of the amount in excess of $1,000 and not in excess of $3,000 to 25 per cent of the amount in excess of $10,000,000.

BRAUNS DECLARE ARMISTICE; SIEGE OF HOME LIFTED

Judge Continues Hearing Until Monday.

An armistice was agreed to yesterday between attorneys for Mrs. Vesta Braun and her husband, George P. Braun, the thirty-two hour siege at the family home at 1221 Astor street was lifted and Mrs. Braun, the besieged, was given carte blanche by Superior Judge Charles A. McDonald to pass at will through the lines of the enemy—private detectives who are guarding the disputed residence.

Shortly after Judge McDonald ordered a status quo, Mrs. Braun and her sister, Mrs. Florence Palmerton, both weary from two cold, sleepless nights spent in the barricaded bedroom suite on the third floor of the Astor street home, hurried over to their apartment at the Ambassador hotel.

Armistice Until Tomorrow.

The status quo will be maintained until 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon and in the interim Mrs. Braun will be permitted to enter or leave the Astor street residence unmolested and without losing her homestead rights. Tomorrow Judge McDonald will pass upon the validity of an alleged power of attorney granted by Mrs. Braun to her husband two years ago. It is upon this scrap of paper that the legality of the sale of the Astor street home by Mr. Braun to Fred Upham—the main point of contention in the fight—depends.

Upon this alleged power of attorney Mr. Braun based his right to affix his wife's signature to the deed. Mrs. Braun contends that she gave her husband power of attorney nearly two years ago merely in order that he might gain access to her safety deposit vault and that she did not intend it as perpetual authority to represent her in all legal matters. The ordinary power of attorney does not include the power to dispose of a wife's dower and homestead rights unless so specifically stated. Attorney Louis E. Hart, counsel for Mr. Braun, promised to produce the paper in court tomorrow.

"Two Terrible Nights."

"I didn't wait one moment longer than necessary to leave that house as soon as Mr. Patterson, my attorney, told me everything was all right," said Mrs. Braun shortly after she arrived at the Ambassador. "Those were two terrible nights. The first night we both almost froze from the cold and last night the odor from those kerosene stoves was so dreadful we had to open the windows. We didn't know which was worse, the stoves or the cold.

"It was all very exciting with the flashlights popping away below us. The whole thing seems so childish and I did not think Mr. Braun would act that way. Just before we left today a reporter broke into the house some way and came up to our room. I don't know how in the world he got in, but Mr. Braun learned of it and became so angry he discharged the detectives on guard and employed a new force."

$2,100 Debt an Issue.

Attorney Perry S. Patterson asked the hearing before Judge McDonald on the suit for separate maintenance filed by Mrs. Braun on Friday. She is asking for $20,000 annual maintenance. She also alleged in her bill that her husband owes her $2,100. Attorney Hart admitted the debt and asserted he held a check for the amount which would be turned over to Mrs. Braun as soon as she surrendered a note which her husband had given her for the money. Attorney Patterson explained that Mr. Braun's detectives had prevented him from even seeing Mrs. Braun.

"I haven't been able to get Mrs. Braun out to get the note," he said.

"You mean, you can't get her back in if she gets out," said Mr. Hart.

"Why, I wasn't even able to get in myself," said Mr. Patterson. "I went over to the house to get Mrs. Braun to sign the papers in this case and a burly fellow stopped me and said that he had orders to let no one in."

"The woman needs food and clothing and she should not be imprisoned," continued Mr. Patterson.

"Well, the stairs are not barred; she can leave any time she wants," retorted Mr. Hart. "The trouble is, she knows she can't get back."

Mr. Patterson asserted that although Mrs. Braun had gone to live at the hotel she had no intention of abandoning her home.

Attorney Hart made a general denial of all of the allegations in the bill for separate maintenance, particularly the charge that Braun was an habitual drunkard.

Judge McDonald then suggested that the matter be deferred until Monday, at which time he promised to go into the merits of the petition.

DUVEEN REPEATS 'FERRONIERE' IS NOT BY DA VINCI

Replies to Mrs. Hahn in $500,000 Suit.

New York, Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Sir Joseph Duveen, senior member of Duveen Brothers, Inc., 5th avenue art dealers, who was sued for $500,000 because he denied that a painting, "La Belle Ferroniere," brought to this country for sale by Mrs. Andree Hahn, was the original work of Leonardo Da Vinci, made his answer to the suit today. He replies that not only was the picture an imitation of the original, but that it was not even the work of a first class artist.

Sir Joseph's original criticism, made when the painting was about to be sold to the Kansas City Art institute by Mrs. Hahn for $500,000, was the basis for the suit.

The answer filed today is a short treatise on the art of Da Vinci, and, by careful comparison of details in the painting in this country and the painting in the Louvre in Paris—supposed up to this time to have been the original—denies that any portion of the picture resembles the work of Da Vinci.

His opinion as to the value of the painting, the answer sets forth, is shared by Raymond Wyer, director of the Worcester Art museum; Edward W. Forbes, director of the Fogg Art museum at Harvard; Frank Jewett Mather, professor of art at Princeton; Dr. Valentiner, curator of the Detroit Art museum; Charles Loeser of Florence, Italy; and Seymour de Ricci of Paris, who has compiled a catalogue of the paintings in the Louvre, all of whom have seen the painting. Mr. de Ricci came to this country especially to examine it.

Do You Recognize Her?

Mrs. May Knowles—Manager of the Glen Inn Cafeteria—known by thousands who enjoy the wonderful meals she prepares for them daily

When Mother cooks for four she feels she is busy. And when "company" comes to dinner it's an "event."

But when a few hundred more than are expected come in to eat at the Glen Inn, Mrs. Knowles doesn't bat an eye. It's not an "event."

Mrs. Knowles is a wonderful cook and wonderful trainer of cooks. Her schooling of cooks in Glen Inn requirements is unquestionably a big factor in the success of this cafeteria—the oldest in Chicago. As a "guesser" of what you are going to like for your lunch or supper she deserves a lot of credit.

No wonder Glen Inn meals are so good! Fifteen years of experience would make any bride's effort blush.

Take corned beef, for instance! Mrs. Knowles insists that it must be cured under her supervision on the premises—and it is. So on with other things—pastries all made in the Glen Inn kitchen—fish must be fresh—meats must be A1.

When you eat at the Glen Inn you eat well—better things at less cost—amid pleasant surroundings—with or without music, as you choose.

Come into the Glen Inn tomorrow for lunch or supper—if not in town, come in the first time you are—meet your friends here.

MELVILLE STONE, UNMUZZLED NOW, TALKS RIGHT OUT

Ex-Newspaper Man Hits at Senate, Theorists.

Melville E. Stone, former general manager of the Associated Press, in an address before 250 members and guests of the Commercial club following a banquet in the Blackstone hotel last night, referred to himself as "unmuzzled" since he had severed his connection with the news agency.

MELVILLE E. STONE.

By way of proving this, he bit into "Some of Our Problems," drawing blood on congress, and leaving marks on 100 per cent Americans who preach isolation. He also criticized the constitution of the United States, saying it had delegated too much power to the judicial branch of the government.

Welcome to "Home Comer."

Samuel Insull, president of the Commercial club, characterized the gathering in the crystal ballroom of the Blackstone as a "homecoming welcome to one of Chicago's most distinguished citizens." Mr. Stone now resides in New York.

"It is almost as difficult to call the roll of conspicuous members of the United States senate as it is to repeat the words of our national anthem, 'The Star Spangled Banner,'" said Mr. Stone, in deploring the seventeenth amendment, which provided for popular election of senators. "And there is something very wrong in the lower house of congress. The members of that body all seem to have district minds, rather than national or international minds. Indeed, there is something well nigh akin to chaos."

Deplores "Bloc" Control.

The veteran newspaper man deprecated the recent development of what he termed "bloc control" in congress, the domination of factions serving farmers or other special groups.

Germany should be made the economic slave of the world for 100 years, Mr. Stone said.

"But it can't be done," he added. "I grant you that she is lying about how much she can pay, but there is equal falsehood on the other side as to what she can pay."

In condemning advocates of isolation for this country, Mr. Stone said: "I hope the time will come when more people will join me in having little respect for the man who boasts he is '100 per cent American' and who is not one-hundredth of 1 per cent internationalist."

Many editors from other cities attended the banquet. Among Chicagoans were John G. Shedd, George M. Reynolds, Harold F. McCormick, Cyrus H. McCormick, Samuel M. Felton, Hale Holden, Julius Rosenewald, and Maj. Gen. George Bell Jr.

One of the incidents of Mr. Stone's day in Chicago was a visit to William Knox, with whom he worked in the "early days" and who has been four years confined to Wesley hospital.

ILLINOIS ASSOCIATION OF LAWYERS ELECTS OLD OFFICERS AGAIN

The Lawyers' Association of Illinois held its annual meeting yesterday at the state headquarters in the City Hall Square building. After the transaction of the business at hand, an election of officers, which was merely an indorsement of the last year's officials, was held. All are Chicago men. Justus Chancellor was reelected president, Frank M. Moore was made secretary for the fifteenth consecutive time, and Harry W. Setandidge was renamed as treasurer.

JUSTUS CHANCELLOR.

HELD TO GRAND JURY.

Bonds for William Wood, 28 years old, salesman, who was held to the grand jury Friday on a serious charge, were set at $5,000 yesterday by Judge John K. Prindiville in the South Clark street court.

ENGLAND SHOWS MORE INTEREST IN WEST INDIES

Islands May Be Linked in Confederation.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Jan. 20.—Political and economic changes of far reaching importance are impending in the West Indies as a result of post-war readjustment. The chief powers in these waters are now America and Great Britain, although France occupies a strategic position that must not be overlooked in the new planning of air routes and submarine bases.

Trade, naval, and air strategy enter the picture which has led Great Britain in the last few months to awaken regarding the West Indies, ask what is the matter down here and send a commission which is now investigating.

The announced purpose of the commission is to see what the people want and if it would be safe to give them greater self-government. No question of independence or transfer to the United States is being considered.

Seek New Confederation.

On the contrary, there is a strong movement emanating from the empire party in Great Britain to form a West Indies confederation taking in the British Honduras and British Guiana on the South American mainland, with the central government probably at Trinidad, that would have a greater voice in imperial affairs. This plan has met with little favor. In fact, the Barbadoes and the Windward and Leeward island groups refused to send delegations to a conference called at Port of Spain this month, which was intended as a stepping stone to the proposed confederation.

The underlying sentiment is strong for the British flag, but businessmen fear trade retaliation on the part of the United States, which is the natural market for all these islands. The British as well the American West Indies live largely by trade with North America.

Canada Covets Trade.

Canada is coveting these gardens in the blue Caribbean and is reaching a long arm around the United States toward them, seeking closer political and trade relations. This movement seems to have a better chance for success than the confederation plan, for the islands have very little interest in common, the trade is small with each other and there is little inter-island shipping.

As a result of possessing a string of islands and naval bases from Halifax to Bermuda and circling the Caribbean to the coast of South America, Great Britain dominates the situation on the Atlantic. It is governing in the old crown colony style, tolerantly and perhaps wisely, but still holding with an iron grip under a velvet glove.

British Fleet Near U. S.

The headquarters of the British West Indies fleet is at Bermuda while the American is at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Port Castries in St. Lucia and Port of Spain are the British supply bases and preparations were begun here a year ago to make this an oil and coal supply port. But Kingston seems to be neglected in the new policy.

Port Royal at the harbor mouth is fortified and there is a seven mile natural breakwater which makes the harbor a safe riding place for ships at anchor at from six to eight fathoms off the town. The entrance to the channel is narrow and winding and the place was defended by guns in the hills during the war.

The West Indies squadron was here recently. Shipping was improved but the cargoes are light. The chief lines are to New York in the fruit trade and a fortnightly service to Halifax. The harbor has not been improved in years and this is one of the things that the colony is asking England to undertake.

Could Dominate Panama Canal.

Kingston as a submarine and air base could dominate the Panama canal entrance, as it is only 540 miles from Colon. However, the American base at Cuba is only ninety miles away and the big Cocosolo navy aviation station at Cristobal has sent navy planes here. There are American aviation landing fields at Guantanamo and the island of Pines between here and Cuba.

No fields have been developed here, although the racecourse offers a landing place, and there are plenty of open spaces on the costal plain. This is a potential rather than an actual base and the British have not developed it on the theory that it could be aimed at only one power and this is not their policy.

The West Indian aviation committee with the approval of the British air ministry and the colonial office proposes to develope air routes in the Caribbean. The Bahamas voted £25,000 (roughly $100,000) for an air mail service to Miami.

RUSSIA CONCURS IN GENOA PLANS, ITALY INFORMED

MOSCOW, Jan. 21.—[By the Associated Press.]—Soviet foreign minister Tchitcherin, in a note dispatched to the Italian premier in answer to the invitation to send delegates to the coming Genoa conference, says the Russian central executive committee has been called in extraordinary session for Jan. 27 to decide upon the personnel of the Russian delegation.

The same meeting, says the note, will provide the Russian representatives with extraordinary powers.

The note says Russia concurs with the governments represented at the recent supreme council meeting at Cannes regarding the importance of the problem of economic and financial rehabilitation.

Y. M. C. A. MAN IS BIGAMIST; LONDON WIFE IS FREED

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The divorce court has annuled the alleged bigamous wartime marriage of George Wallace Guthrie and Fanny Barwise Guthrie, a pretty English girl, on the grounds that Guthrie had not divorced his first wife, an American, whom he married in Iowa in 1904. Guthrie during the war was a secretary for the Y. M. C. A. in London. He married Miss Barwise on Nov. 22, 1918. He left the same day for France. Later his wife learned that he had been previously married.

CITY HALL CAMP BOASTS IT WORKS AS OTHERS SLEEP

Plans Big Fight to Save Small in Legislature.

BY E. O. PHILLIPS.

Gov. Small and the Chicago city hall machine will start their April primary campaign upon the fundamental proposition that more than one-third of the state senate must be in the machine's control to stop any proposed impeachment of the governor and that a working majority in the house must be elected that will give to the governor and the city hall the speakership in the next legislature.

This was permitted to leak out from city hall headquarters, where it is hinted that the governor, Fred Lundin, and the mayor have put over something substantial, while the anti-city hall Republicans have been attempting to reach an agreement on a county ticket and with Democrats far from accord within their own camp.

"Work While Others Sleep."

"We work while they sleep," a city hall chieftain said. "We will have a complete legislative ticket in every district in Cook county and in most of the downstate districts. Up here we have our candidates all set and the petitions will be in circulation Monday. Downstate, the administration's record on wet and dry legislation insures nomination of enough of our crowd to make it easy to handle any difficult situation that may arise in Springfield next winter.

"If we can't put over the job the Anti-Saloon league can and that is good enough for us. With the legislative nominations fixed we can begin to worry about a county ticket. Maybe we will spend $300,000 or $400 000 and a lot of hard work on a full county slate, but maybe we won't. There isn't any hurry anyhow."

Waiting for Antis' Action.

Pending adjustment of minor differences in the Brundage-Deneen-Crowe camp over the county ticket, there has been little consideration of legislative or congressional candidates, and the first day of filing is Feb. 10. Democratic legislative nominations are to be in charge of a committee of seven, to be named by Chairman Dailey of the county committee, of which former State Representative Michael L. Igoe is to be chairman.

Leaders of the anti-Thompson elements made progress yesterday and are understood to be near a definite conclusion that may be announced tomorrow. The prevailing belief is there will be a give-and-take arrangement entered into that means a single primary ticket to be presented at the April primaries in opposition to whatever policy the city hall adopts.

The Democratic county committee's committee of fifteen on county candidates will listen tomorrow to the last of the appeals in behalf of suggested candidates.

Renomination of County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer, County Treasurer Patrick J. Carr, Probate Judge Henry Horner, and County Superintendent of Schools Edward J. Tobin is assured. The county judgeship undoubtedly will go to James C. Jeffery, and William G. Legner can have the nomination for the board of review if he wants it.

KANE COUNTY G. O. P. LEADER IN RACE FOR STATE TREASURER

OSCAR NELSON.
[Carlson Photo.]

Oscar Nelson, county treasurer of Kane county, on Friday became the first formally avowed candidate for the Republican nomination for state treasurer in the April primaries. It is understood he is to have the support of northern Illinois organization Republicans, particularly in the Eleventh congressional district. That the state crowd controlled by Gov. Small, working with the city hall machine, may have no primary candidate is said to be probable.

Mr. Nelson is a banker, two times mayor of Geneva, former state president of the John Ericsson Republican League of Illinois, the Swedish-American Republican organization, and is now the president of the state organization of county treasurers.

Mr. Nelson, in his announcement said: "I come from a district whose counties always return large Republican majorities and I solicit the support of all citizens who desire the state treasurer's office to be run strictly according to the letter and the spirit of the new law regarding the office."

MAN, 75, ENDS HIS LIFE.

Despondent because of illness, John Lee, 75 years old, shot and killed himself yesterday at the home of his nephew, Patrick Lee, 7809 Calumet avenue.

VOTE TOMORROW IN 6 DISTRICTS ON CON CON SEATS

Special elections will be held tomorrow in six Illinois senatorial districts to fill vacancies in the Illinois constitutional convention. The two Chicago districts affected are on the west side, each taking in parts of the Eighteenth ward. In the Second district, to succeed the late Michael F. Sullivan, the candidates are George W. Tebbens, Republican, and Abraham Yarmo, Democrat. In the Twenty-seventh district, succeeding the late Edward J. Corcoran, the candidates are Joseph Parker, Republican, and former Ald. Stanley Adamkiewicz, Democrat. Downstate elections are in the Kankakee, Danville, Springfield, and Vandalia districts.

In the Chicago districts, the board of election commissioners will have a full force of judges and clerks of election at the polls, although there is no indication of interest in the vote. Estimated cost of the six special elections is $25,000, including the expense of the primaries of Dec. 28, at which there were no contests.

Brockmeyer Comes Out for Senate in 23d District

Anti-Thompson Republicans of the Twenty-third senatorial district, composed of part of the northwest side and Oak Park, have found a candidate for the lower house of the legislature in Thomas A. Brockmeyer, a deputy in the office of the clerk of the Criminal court. Mr. Brockmeyer was a candidate in the three cornered primary fight two years ago, losing by a small margin. With the anti-Thompson forces united his chances of success are greatly improved.

House Refuses to Reduce Alien Custodian Expenses

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—The house today rejected an amendment offered by Representative Connally, Democrat, Texas, to the independent offices appropriation bill to cut from $370,000 to $250,000, the amount carried for expenses, of the alien property custodian's office during the coming fiscal year. Amendments by Representative Black, Democrat, Texas, proposing a reduction from $60,000 to $40,000 of the amount provided for repairs at the White House also was voted down.

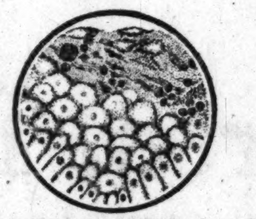
Healthy throat membrane looks like this—the tiny cells in orderly arrangement, close ranked to resist germ invasions. This is a reproduction of a microscopic cross section of healthy throat tissue.



Here is what you would see through the microscope when the delicate membrane lining the throat becomes irritated or diseased. The ranks of cells are broken up—germs can get through and multiply.

A Dry and Tickling Throat Means Irritated Throat Tissues

A cough may not be anything more than an inconvenience. A simple sore throat may get well in a day or two.

But these irritations are Nature's way of signalling danger ahead. The inflammation of the delicate throat tissues which causes the cough or the soreness frequently develops into a serious infection.

It pays to give the natural defenses of your throat every possible chance to withstand the ceaseless bombardment of dust, smoke and germs which the air of our modern cities contains. When the cells in the sensitive throat membrane are irritated and inflamed they cannot cast off the invading germs—and serious trouble often results.

Zymole Trokeys meet the need for a mild, pleasant-to-take throat antiseptic which will soothe and moisten the injured tissues and strengthen them for their vital work of protection.

Zymole Trokeys are not offered as a cure for serious diseases of the throat. But they are a valuable preventative of throat irritation if used in time and will relieve the mild inflammation that causes dryness, tickling, hoarseness and coughs. They contain no violent drugs or opiates. They have no harmful after-effects.

Carry a box of Zymole Trokeys with you. Don't let your throat tickle. Don't let it become dry or sore. Don't cough. A Trokey now and then will help a lot. All drug stores sell them.

CLEAR WAY FOR SMALL'S PLEA ON NEXT SATURDAY

Lawyers Agree on Plan to Expedite Case.

BY PARKE BROWN.

A misunderstanding concerning the immediate program of the prosecution in the case of Gov. Len Small was cleared up yesterday and the threatened delay until March was avoided.

It was agreed by counsel before Judge Claire C. Edwards at Waukegan that Gov. Small will plead in person next Saturday and that the plea of counsel will be accepted for his codefendant, Vernon S. Curtis, in the event the latter is still confined to his home by quarantine regulations.

It was further agreed that motions for separate trials—which the state labeled "frivolous"—will be disposed of on Saturday. This is said to be the last dilatory motion the defense can offer and, on that basis, it is expected the date for the actual trial—beginning with the selection of the jury—will be announced as soon as Judge Edwards rules on the severance motions.

Finds There's Misunderstanding.

In a newspaper interview on Friday Judge Edwards had announced he had concluded not to allow the proposed continuance of a week because of diphtheria in Curtis' family. He said that he would adjourn the December term of court and let the case wait until the March term.

As soon as Attorney Alexander Beaubien, for the defense, and Attorneys James H. Wilkerson and Ralph J. Dady for the defense, began to discuss the situation before the court it became apparent there was a misunderstanding concerning the prospective delay.

Judge Edwards had understood that in addition to the postponement until Saturday, the state proposed to ask another week in which to examine affidavits submitted by the defense in support of motions for separate trials. It was explained the state had not contemplated any delay beyond this week.

Attorney May Enter Plea.

Attorney Dady asked Attorney Beaubien if, in the event Mr. Curtis is unable to be present on Saturday, the defense would be willing to enter his plea of "not guilty" through counsel with an agreement that before the actual trial begins Curtis will enter his plea in person. Attorney Beaubien agreed to this.

Judge Edwards then spoke of the time already consumed by the case "without getting anywhere" and Attorney Wilkerson expressed his confidence that the severance affidavits are "frivolous." The contents of these documents have not been disclosed fully, but it is said Gov. Small's affidavit recites that because of his position his case should not be tried simultaneously with the Curtis case. The Curtis affidavit alleges newspaper articles have led to prejudice against Gov. Small, which will affect the governor's trial and that this prejudice does not extend to him.

Contentions of State.

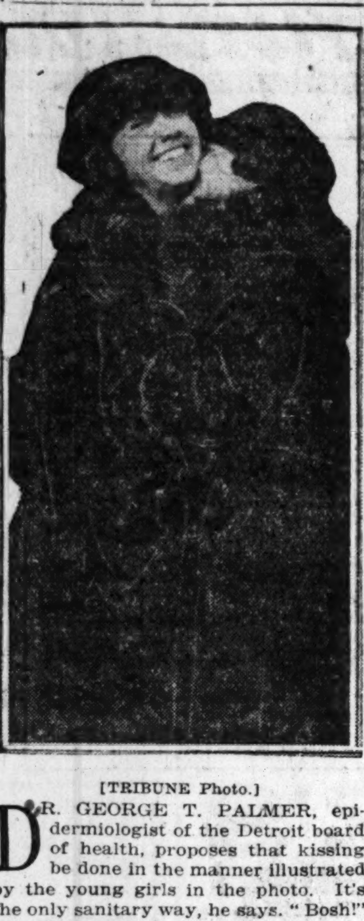
Attorneys for the state claim neither of these contentions offers any basis for a motion for severance. The only ground for such a motion, they hold, is a showing that in a joint trial that evidence against A which is not pertinent or relevant to B would still hurt B.

"We want an immediate trial," said Attorney Beaubien, near the close of the discussion.

"So do we," said Attorney Wilkerson.

On this understanding it was agreed that both sides will be present in court Saturday morning ready for business.

SANITARY KISSES



[TRIBUNE Photo.]

DR. GEORGE T. PALMER, epidermiologist of the Detroit board of health, proposes that kissing be done in the manner illustrated by the young girls in the photo. It's the only sanitary way, he says. "Bosh!" cry Chicago doctors. "The old fashioned method of kissing is no more dangerous than a handshake." Take your choice of advice.

FINED FOR FALSE PRETENSE.

R. E. Skidmore, 7024 Ainslie street, and Frank Kunna, 538 Cass street, were each fined $3 and costs for disorderly conduct yesterday by Judge John K. Prindiville. They were charged with obtaining $1 from J. S. Hopkins on representations they were soliciting for the Salvation Army.

FIXING TEETH FREE FOR POOR KIDDIES, PLAN

Dentists Want to Help 'Em Keep Smiling.

Little Dominick, 8 years old, presented himself, with tearful eyes, before the social service nurse. He had a "turrible toothache." The nurse, investigating, found decayed teeth and cavities in abundance. She wrote a note to Dominick's parents, advising dental treatment at once. Later, Dominick returned, still in pain, with the reply that his parents couldn't afford to send him.

Then, the nurse, writing another note, sent the lad to the —— infirmary, on the west side. Here, under the care of a resident experienced dentist, the offending teeth were repaired, and a smile supplanted Dominick's grimace of pain.

Campaign for Free Infirmaries.

To make the incident related an actuality rather than fiction is the dream of every dentist who attended the last session of the fifth-eighth annual meeting and clinic of the Chicago Dental society at the Drake hotel yesterday.

Out of the meeting is expected to grow a campaign by dental societies, looking for help from the state board of health, the legislature, the county boards, and other organizations, for the establishment of free dental infirmaries in larger centers, and of extending preventive dentistry and mouth hygiene in every school in the state.

Dentists pointed out that at the county hospital one, unable to pay, can have a tooth pulled. But in the city at present, they said, there are no facilities for the more subtle exercise of the dentist's art, as filling cavities, where poor children can be relieved of suffering.

Boston One a Model.

The ideal infirmary of this nature, Dr. Dan U. Cameron declared, would be one modeled after that in operation in Boston now. The child to be treated waiting his turn, deposits a nominal fee of 10 or 20 cents before getting in the chair. The trifling sum takes off the sting of charity, Dr. Cameron said, and lets the lad retain the idea that he is "paying his own way."

"The Juvenile court, the social service nurses, the various charities," the dentist went on, "have been urging the establishment of infirmaries for a long time. We need three, in each side of the city. And we need reliable practitioners, who would stay there from 9 o'clock in the morning to 5 at night."

Eastern cities, he said, have infirmaries established by wealthy men, who, remembering their own agony with "sick" teeth in childhood, desired to spare this pain to children of later generations. No philanthropist, he emphasized, could more surely perpetuate his name to posterity than by making a donation to an endeavor of this kind.

Visiting dentists, from almost every state in the union and every Canadian province, sought the railroad stations at the conclusion of the several clinics held in separate hotel rooms in the morning. The clinics included those on operative dentistry, partial denture, porcelain, anaesthesia, radiography, oral surgery, and bacteriological work.

"Block Anaesthesia."

"Local anaesthesia is taking the place of general anaesthesia," Dr. W. I. Williams, Chicago dentist, said. "'Block' anaesthesia is in use largely today, in which a portion of a man's jaw can be made feelingless."

That American dentistry is far ahead of that in England and continental Europe, he said, was evidenced by the appearance in a late issue of the London Times of an extensive article on the X-ray. American dentists have been diagnosing by the X-ray for the last ten years, Dr. Williams maintained.

Officers, members of the board of directors, and chairmen of committees of the National Dental association, all at the Chicago meeting, intend to take up the matter of free infirmaries when the national body meets next July in Los Angeles.

AMERICAN LEGION NOTES

A public rally will be held at the Elks' clubhouse in Oak Park by the Oak Park post, No. 15, American Legion, on Tuesday evening, Feb. 7. Four reels of war pictures will be shown, and Maj. Schroeder, the famous aviator, will tell of his "air experiences." The film is of actual battle scenes.

Oak Park post, No. 15, American Legion, will give its benefit performance at the Warrington theater on the nights of Feb. 14 and 15. The executive committee has reported that the French fund closed with a final check of $766.83 for the rehabilitation of the adopted French village for which the post made a campaign for rehabilitation. This is in addition to the $500 sent last year at the opening of the drive.

A meeting of Forges post No. 196 will be held Monday evening, Jan. 23, in the Second regiment armory, 2635 West Madison street.

Lawndale-Crawford post will meet next Tuesday night at 8 o'clock at 2341 Kedzie avenue.

B. H. Nixon of Oskaloosa, Ia., wishes to hear from men in Chicago and vicinity who saw service in Siberia.

American Legion naval post will give a banquet at 7:30 Saturday evening, Jan. 28, at the Lumberman's club, 11 South La Salle street, for members and their shipmates who should be members. An unusually interesting program has been arranged.

Lieut. Charles W. Schick, past commander Naval post and senior vice commander Illinois division American Legion, and State Commander McCaully will address the gathering on Legion work in general. All Naval post members and ex-navy men are invited. Reservations can be made through Adj. G. G. Speir, 1335 Insurance Exchange building. Phone Wabash 6154.

Members of Hyde Park post are urged to attend a business meeting of the post next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Chicago Beach hotel.

THREE INJURED WHEN THEIR AUTO HITS STREET CAR

Three men were seriously injured last night when the automobile in which they were riding collided with a southbound Ashland avenue street car at Austin avenue. They were Engol Larson, 1929 North Francisco avenue; Adolph, his brother, and an unidentified man about 23 years old who is in the county hospital with a fractured skull.

An automobile containing two men was struck by a New York Central train near Buffington, Ill., last night. The machine was demolished. The occupants escaped with but slight injuries.

Mrs. Anna Hefner, 28 years old, 1162 North Clark street, was probably internally injured yesterday in a collision at Ashland avenue and North avenue.

Couple to Celebrate Silver Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Callahan of 2935 Warren avenue will celebrate their silver wedding anniversary this afternoon and evening at the home of Mrs. Callahan's father, J. J. Cahill, 1221 Gilpin place. Two score of friends will be present to extend congratulations.

BEAU BRUMMEL OF WAR DAYS, IS ARRESTED BY U. S.

Charles Meyer, known as "Capt. Charles Devereaux," once a wartime Beau Brummel, was arrested by federal officials yesterday on a charge of using the mails to defraud.

He was taken at 6036 Stony Island avenue with his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Julius P. Bernstein.

They are accused of soliciting the patronage of persons who desired to do sewing and knitting at home. For $1 work would be sent to the applicants' homes, the advertisements said. The harvest, federal officials charge, has been nearly $200 a day. They were indicted several months ago.

EMPLOYMENT IN U. S. SHOWS 50-50 GAIN AND LOSS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Reports received by the bureau of labor statistics of the department of labor show that in seven out of fourteen groups of industries there were increases in the number of persons on the payroll in December as compared with November, and in the other seven decreases.

There was an increase of 5.4 per cent in leather manufacturing and an increase of 3.2 per cent in car building and repairing. A decrease of 5.1 per cent is shown in bituminous coal mining and one of 3 per cent in automobile manufacturing.

Twelve of the fourteen groups show increases in the amount of money paid to employés in December over November and two show decreases.

Comparing the figures of December, 1921, with those of the identical establishments in December, 1920, there were increases in the number of persons employed in eight of the fourteen groups and decreases in the other six.

JUDGE BARASA CUTS WAGES OF TEAMSTERS, $2-$3

Chicago teamsters employed in the wood industries yesterday received a cut in wages averaging from 10 to 12 per cent in an award handed down by Judge Barasa, arbitrator between the Employers' association and the unions.

Judge Barasa explained that the unions had said they would be satisfied with a general $2 a week cut in wages of all teamsters.

"The lumber industry has taken a slump in prices and practically every lumber yard in Chicago is doing business at a loss, in many cases a heavy one," he continued, explaining the basis for the cut of $3 a week for all teamsters, with the exception of single team drivers, whose cut is only $2. The award will be in force for one year.

A Sootless Fuel

Carbocoal burns without soot, smoke or odor and with but very little ash. It is uniform in size and therefore very easy to handle. It has 33 per cent more heat than ordinary coal and a properly made fire of Carbocoal will burn in excess of twelve hours without attention.

Carbocoal makes no litter or dust around the cellar and thereby greatly pleases the tidy housewife who is as particular about her cellar as she is about the rest of the house.

INSURANCE PAPER TELLS OF RAISE IN THEFT RATES

Following publication in THE TRIBUNE last Sunday of an article concerning a raise in burglary and holdup rates, quoting the head of the Burglary Insurance Underwriters' company that a 50 per cent increase was to be made in Chicago, much interest was aroused in insurance circles.

THE TRIBUNE is in receipt of scores of letters from insurance men and others. Consequently it believes the following, clipped from the National Underwriter, Chicago insurance weekly, to be of interest:

An increase of about 50 per cent in personal holdup rates is announced, effective Feb. 1. In Detroit, Chicago, Toledo, St. Louis, Cleveland, and Kansas City and territory where the burglary rates are higher than in other territories the increase amounts to almost a flat 50 per cent. These cities are known as class A.

Comparison of Rates.

"The former rate for personal holdup coverage was $5 for the first $1,000, when written in connection with a residence burglary policy, and $3.50 for each additional $1,000. The new rate is $7.50 for the first $1,000, when written in connection with residence burglary, $12.50 for the second $1,000, $17.50 for the third $1,000, $22.50 for the fourth $1,000, $27.50 for the fifth $1,000, and $5 for each additional $1,000.

"When not written in connection with residence burglary the rate is much higher. In fact, most burglary writing companies will not issue a personal holdup policy unless a residence contract is also taken by the assured. The old rate for personal holdup without residence burglary in connection was $10 for the first $1,000 and $7 for each additional $1,000. The new figures call for $15 for the first $1,000, $25 for the second, $35 for the third, $45 for the fourth, $52.50 for the fifth, and $7.50 for each additional $1,000 above $5,000.

Losses Have Been Heavy.

"Burglary companies report that personal holdup losses have been heavy. The premium collected in most cases is small, and if there is even a small loss, the profits for two or three years are wiped out. The companies have been seriously affected by the crime wave which has swept over the country this winter. The ranks of the unemployed have been swelled in all of the large cities, and in some of the industrial centers the situation is critical. Personal holdup losses have been so frequent and in such large amounts that the companies had been forced to push the rates up considerably in order to show a profit on the class. There are now only a few companies that will write personal holdup insurance without insisting upon a residence policy."

FOUND AFTER MYSTERY

[Copright: P. & A. Photos.]

MRS. ELLA A. BULL AND DAUGHTER.

New York, Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Mrs. Herman Aubrey Bull, missing from the Ridgewood, N. J., home of her husband, a New York bank teller, was found today at Mount Gilead, North Carolina. A telegram from the Rev. Dr. Oscar Haywood said that Mrs. Bull had come from Atlanta, that "her mind is almost a blank," and that he had taken her to his home. The message said nothing of the Bulls' 7 year old child, Ellanore, who disappeared with her mother.

Ralph Costa, the high school boy and a neighbor, who started Mrs. Bull on her flight at her insistence, and who went to Canada with $50 Mrs. Bull gave him, gave the clew. He suggested that she might be with Dr. Haywood, who was her spiritual adviser when he was pastor of a New York church.

POLICE TO GET TIME TO FIGHT RELEASE WRITS

At a conference yesterday of Chief Justice Kickham Scanlan of the Criminal court, Judge Hosea Wells, representing the Municipal court; Chief of Police Fitzmorris, and representatives of the sheriff's and state's attorney's offices, the police department won an important point in connection with the booking of prisoners.

The conference was the result of a writ of habeas corpus which came up before Judge Scanlan several days ago. Attorneys in the matter argued that the "booking" of a suspect in a police station did not constitute a formal complaint, and consequently bonds could not be issued for his release, and the judge held with them.

"Booking" Considered Return.

It has been the custom of the police to "book" a prisoner when a writ of habeas corpus was filed in his behalf, and this was considered a good return on the writ. Judge Scanlan, however, suggested that this was not legal, and told the chief that if the return were made in a different form he would give the police sufficient time to take the prisoner before a magistrate and enter a formal charge.

Judge William N. Gemmill of the Municipal court, however, takes the position that Judge Scanlan is wrong in his contention that bonds cannot be issued for a prisoner before he is taken before a committing magistrate. The law clearly holds, Judge Gemmill points out, that any judge of the Municipal, Circuit or Superior courts can release a prisoner on bail either before or after information has been filed.

Takes Issue with Judge.

"Judge Scanlan seems to be as unfamiliar with the law as he is with the facts," Judge Gemmill said, "for when he says that Chicago is the worst crime ridden city in the world he either exhibits his ignorance of the world or his desire to besmirch the reputation abroad of this city of his adoption."

MAN ASPHYXIATED IN KITCHEN.

Oberlin Carter Case Bobs Up in Report to the House

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—The old case of Oberlin M. Carter, a captain in the army, who was dismissed from service and imprisoned in 1899 for conspiracy to defraud the government in connection with harbor improvements at Savannah, Ga., bobbed up again today with a report to the house from the controller general showing that a final settlement never was made. At the time of Carter's conviction he owed the government $646,667. Through the proceeds of property seized from him and his associates and sold, the government cut the judgment to $223,196, still due according to the report.

The North American Restaurant has become the outstanding success among Chicago dining places because the food is so good it brings the same people back day after day—often several times a day. A record of having achieved a bigger, regular patronage than any other good Chicago dining place—either now or at any other time—is one to be proud of. And we are proud of it.

Every day new people are dining here. They like it so well that, like all others who know us, they come back again and again. And it is this regular and steadily increasing patronage which has made the North American so successful.

Think what it means when a restaurant builds up the splendidly big regular patronage which we have. Would you dine regularly at any restaurant unless the food satisfied you? You know you would not. No matter how low the prices you wouldn't go back day after day if the food did not please you. The great number of people who dine here regularly is conclusive evidence of the quality and taste of our food.

But the North American does more than give you good food. Although our food is the highest quality our prices are low. Here you serve yourself and pay only for the food you eat plus merely the cost of preparing it. You pay nothing for "service." The result is that when you dine here you get the very finest food the markets afford and it costs from 40 to 60 per cent less than other good dining places must charge to include "service." And here there are no waiters to tip—another saving.

Unless you have dined here you are entitled to think it all sounds too good to be true. But dine here just once and you will understand why the North American is so popular.

We welcome the "Kiddies." Bring 'em along.

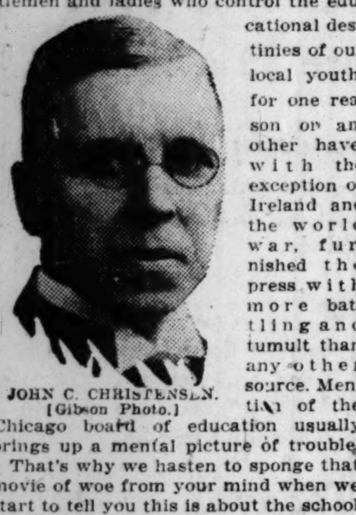
MAKE EVERY NEW SCHOOL ORIGINAL IS NEW METHOD

Old Factory Type to Be Put on Shelf.

"A beautiful building may cost a little more than an ugly one, and yet the building that best fulfills all its functions in use, beauty, and durability is at once the highest expression of architecture and most economical. Taste in the architecture of a community or a nation cannot rise above the intelligent taste of the people. Education in art and public taste is vital to the welfare of any community or any nation."—Henry K. Holsman, former president of the Illinois chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

BY AL CHASE.



JOHN C. CHRISTENSEN.
[Gibson Photo.]

During the last decade or so the gentlemen and ladies who control the educational destinies of our local youth, for one reason or another have, with the exception of Ireland and the world war, furnished the press with more battling and tumult than any other source. Mention of the Chicago board of education usually brings up a mental picture of trouble.

That's why we hasten to sponge that movie of woe from your mind when we start to tell you this is about the school board; for this is a pleasant tale, and, if you've got a youngster in the public schools, one worth reading and thinking about.

Just Like Henry Does.

Some uninspired dumbbell years ago had what he believed to be an inspiration. It was to turn out school buildings like Henry does his cars—all alike, or at least make every ten or twelve alike. The result was that Chicago has scores of schoolhouses that you hardly tell apart and about as attractive architecturally as a pickle factory—and just about as inspiring.

One of the first things John C. Christensen decided when he became architect for the school board last year was that Chicago's schools must be made different, and along with the difference must come architectural beauty which would be an inspiration to the Chicago girl and boy. This is not a reflection on all Mr. Christensen's predecessors, for Chicago has some magnificent school buildings, architecturally inspiring. It is merely telling of what the present school architect has already done and plans doing.

Every One Different.

"I'm designing every new public school as a complete and independent unit, absolutely different from every other school in the city," explained Mr. Christensen. "And not only are the buildings different on the exterior, but the type of architecture is carried out in the interior decoration.

"For instance, the Henderson school is designed in the colonial style of architecture, both outside and inside. The Marshall school will be in the Italian Florentine renaissance style, while the new Mayfair school will be built in the Tudor or late Gothic style of architecture in vogue during 1450 and 1500. The assembly halls and other important rooms are designed in the same period.

Just as Cheap as Old Method.

"Of course, there's no limit to the variety of buildings we can design so that every new school will be absolutely different. And it won't cost any more to make them different than it did to make them all alike. That's the interesting feature of it all. It was economy as much as anything else that prompted the old method of using the same plans, but with that argument knocked out there's no reason in the world why we should keep on turning out factory type schools.

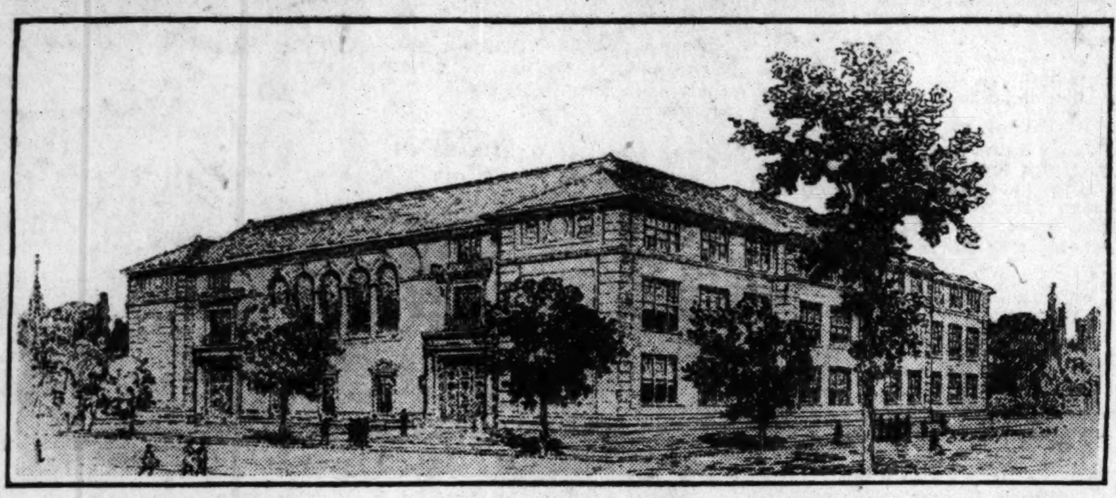
"There's no question but what the Chicago kiddies will get more out of going to a beautiful school building than to a factory like structure, both in inspiration and knowledge. For at their age impressions are lasting and it's worth while making those impressions good ones."

Greatest Building Program.

Mr. Christensen says the 1922 school building program is the greatest in the history of Chicago. The budget calls for an expenditure of $15,000,000. Here are just a few of the projects: A brand new $3,000,000 high school for the Albany park district, in the two blocks bounded by Wilson, Leland, St. Louis and Kimball, work to start next summer; $300,000 addition to West Pullman school and same to Howland school, both to start in next six weeks; $1,000,000 addition to Carl Schurz high school, with large athletic field, something every high school eventually will have; $3,000,000 addition to Crane high, told about recently; $1,500,000 annex to Tilden high, work to start about May 1.

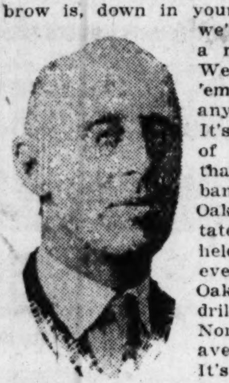
There are still 800 portable schools in use and some schools are operated on a three shift basis, of eight hours each. And despite the big building program there is no chance of catching up for some years, says Mr. Christensen.

Putting Individuality Into Chicago School Buildings



The newest thing in Chicago educational fields is the announcement by Board of Education Architect John C. Christensen that every new school building is to be entirely different from every other Chicago school. The old quantity production factory type system has been shelved. For instance, above is the new Marshall elementary school at Independence and Arthington, designed in the Florentine and Italian renaissance style in vogue in Milan, Bologna, and Venice, introduced by the Lombard artists between 1500 and 1514. It will have twenty-four classrooms, manual training, household arts, kindergarten, social room, doctor and nurse's room, gymnasium, teachers' lunch and rest rooms, and library. The interior design is carried out along lines similar to the exterior. This, too, is an unusual thing.

Shhhh! It's a Mystery!!!



THOMAS B. ROBERTS.

No matter how perpendicular your brow is, down in your inmost heart we'll bet you like a mystery story. We admit we like 'em better than any other kind. It's on that love of the unknown that the coming banquet of the Oak Park Real Estate board, to be held next Friday evening at the Oak Park Masonic drill hall, 127 North Oak Park avenue, is based. It's a "mystery banquet," and presidents of real estate boards from half a dozen other cities are going to attend to find out what it's all about and probably try the scheme themselves.

"We'll guarantee every one who attends will like the entertainment better than the old fashioned kind," predicts Thomas B. Roberts, chairman of the publicity committee and active in putting on this mysterious affair. It'll be at 6:30 p. m. Mr. Roberts, by the way, is the golden tongued orator who walked away with the silver cup at the Rockford realtors' convention in 1920 by making the most original five minute speech on why he believed Oak Park is the best town in the state.

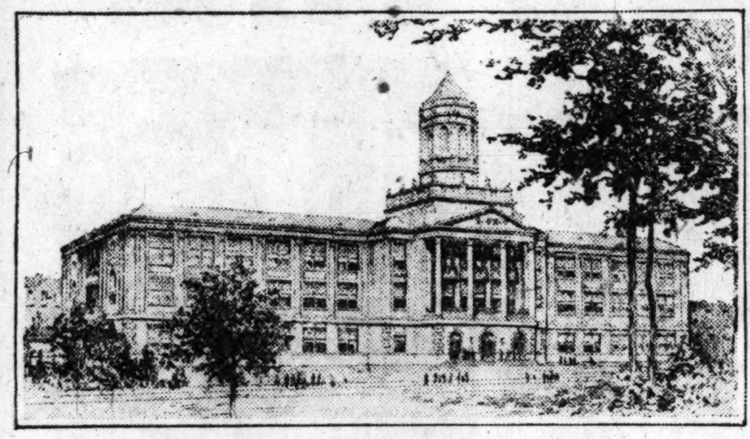
PLANS HYDE PARK STUDIO.

Ernst Roehr, photographer, for years a resident of the East 57th street artists' colony, has purchased from Theodore B. Hinckley the residence at 5809 Harper avenue for a reported $10,000 and will remodel it into a combination home and studio. Charles E. Fox, of J. J. Carroll & Co., was broker.

NEW GRAND AVENUE THEATER.

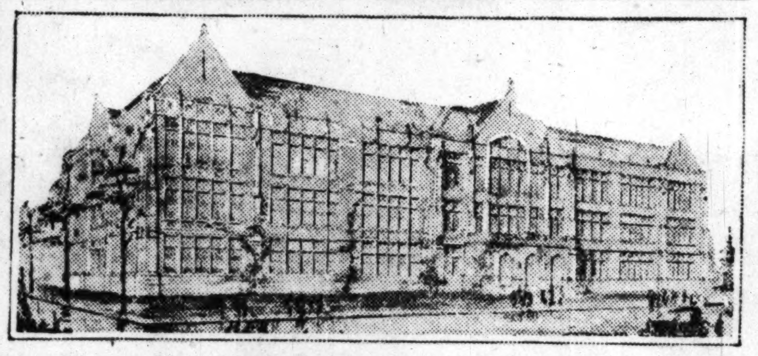
Architect Ira Saxe has drawn plans for a 300 seat movie to be built at once at 7169 Grand avenue, to be called the Clarwood theater.

A Suggestion of Colonial Days



The colonial type of architecture, common in 1725 to 1775, will be used in the new Henderson school at Winchester, South Lincoln, and West 57th, to cost $650,000. There'll be thirty-two classrooms, an 800 seat assembly hall, and the other rooms customary in the modern grammar school.

A Tip from the Tudors



The new $650,000 Mayfair school at Leland, Knox, Wilson, and Kilpatrick has been designed in the Tudor or late Gothic style of architecture, the interior decoration being carried out along the same lines.

News of the Architects

Details and date of the thirty-fifth annual Chicago architectural exhibition of the Art institute have just been made public. It will be given jointly by the Chicago Architectural club, the Illinois society of architects and the Illinois chapter of the A. I. A., with the coöperation of the Art institute, March 11 to April 9.

F. W. Armstrong, general manager of the Citizens' Committee to Enforce the Landis Award, will be the guest of the Illinois society of architects at its monthly meeting on Tuesday evening at the Art institute. Col. Boyden will give an illustrated talk on "Concrete Work in Cold Weather."

Builders and Traders' Exchange Has Election

At the thirty-eighth annual meeting and election of the Chicago Builders and Traders' exchange the following were elected: President, Fred A. Johnson; first vice president, H. F. Bremer; second vice president, H. W. Balfanz; treasurer, O. W. Jovien; directors, N. J. Bique, E. P. Clark, Frank Flaherty, J. J. Sullivan and A. F. Weise.

$1,000,000 IN NEW FLATS FOR ONE DISTRICT

Apartment Building Boom on Far West Side.

Approximately $1,000,000 worth of apartment buildings are under construction, or planned, within a radius of a few blocks of Washington boulevard and Laramie avenue. Work already is under way on forty flats at 5113-23 Washington, designed by Architect J. S. Aroner. There'll be two, three, and four room apartments. The cost will be $225,000. N. H. Weber, the owner, also intends building a sixty flat building, costing $350,000, at the southeast corner of Washington and Le Claire avenue, from plans by Mr. Aroner.

Work is under way on a thirty-six flat building at the southeast corner of West End avenue and Lamon avenue, to cost $200,000, from plans by Architect J. A. Taggart. There'll be one and two room flats with kitchenets. Fred A. Johnson is owner. It is reported that every apartment in this building already has been reserved.

Mr. Johnson also will build two eighteen flat buildings, to cost $200,000, one at the southwest corner of Adams and 50th avenue and the other at the northwest corner. Mr. Taggart is drawing the plans. These two will have two, three, and four room apartments. According to J. Frank Lindsey of G. W. Drollinger & Sons, his firm will manage all these properties. They negotiated the purchase of the sites.

The same brokers have just sold the eighteen flats at 5301-09 Washington boulevard for John C. Crasa to Charles E. Winters for a reported $95,000, subject to $35,000.

Drollinger & Sons announce that they did a record breaking business in a subdivision on Adams street, between La Vergne and Laramie, which they opened last September and completely sold in ninety days.

'Round the Brokers' Offices

H. L. Harrell & Co., real estate and insurance brokers, announce their removal of loop offices to 109 North Dearborn street; phones Central 2773 and State 6644. The Wheaton office will remain the same.

The Real Estate Management corporation has taken over the management of the Garrick building, 64 West Randolph street, for the Garrick Building corporation.

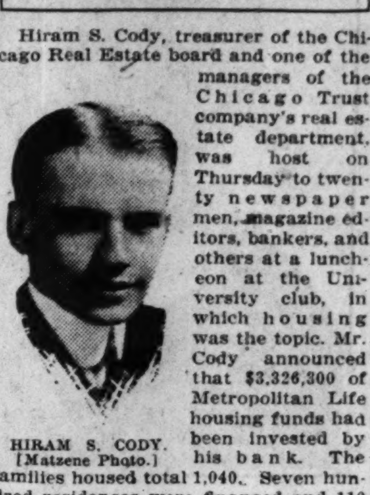
FORMER DELANO RESIDENCE NOW HOME FOR GIRLS

One of Lake View's most attractive residence properties, the twenty-six room house, formerly occupied by Frederic A. Delano, then president of the Wabash railroad, at 510 Wellington avenue, has been purchased by the "Bethany Girls," a religious and philanthropic organization, for $75,000 cash. Paul Steinbrecher & Co. were brokers.

Title was taken by William A. Peterson, president of the organization, which has had national headquarters in the Masonic temple, together with class, dining and rest rooms for many years. All these activities will be transferred north and in addition there will be lodgings for fifty girls.

The "Bethany Girls" have a summer camp at Winona lake, Indiana, accommodating 500. The organization has a national membership of 16,000, of which 1,200 are in Chicago. The property just bought is 165x166. The residence was built twenty years ago for $100,000 from plans by W. A. Otis.

1,040 Families Housed



HIRAM S. CODY.
[Matzene Photo.]

Hiram S. Cody, treasurer of the Chicago Real Estate board and one of the managers of the Chicago Trust company's real estate department, was host on Thursday to twenty newspaper men, magazine editors, bankers, and others at a luncheon at the University club, in which housing was the topic. Mr. Cody announced that $3,326,300 of Metropolitan Life housing funds had been invested by his bank. The families housed total 1,040. Seven hundred residences were financed and 110 apartments.

NEW SUBDIVISION TO BE OPENED ON NORTH SHORE

After months of negotiations A. H. Kraus of the Lake Shore Realty company has acquired from ten different owners forty acres west of Ridge avenue, in Gross Point, for a reported $100,000. This is adjacent to other property acquired last year, and gives the company approximately seventy-five acres between Elmwood, Greeley, and Linden avenues.

Part of this was recently subdivided and sold. The balance is to be put on the market within thirty days, with lots 50 and 100 feet frontage and 122 feet deep. Of course, flats will be barred, and the minimum cost of houses will be $5,000. Lots will sell at from $1,200 up to $2,000, the average being $1,500. The new subdivision is just west of the North Shore Golf club and south of Indian Hill Golf club, and is west of Kenilworth and Wilmette. It will be called Lake Shore Highlands.

WESLEY HOSPITAL TO BUILD HOME FOR ITS NURSES

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

Erection of a new home for nurses to cost $500,000, eight stories and an English basement in height, was announced yesterday at the annual meeting of the hospital association by Perry Lowe, president of the trustees of Wesley Memorial hospital.

The new building will face east on Dearborn street directly opposite the hospital. The land on which it will be built was recently purchased from the Northwestern university for $100,000.

Describes New Home.

A description of the building was given by F. J. Thielbar, a member of the executive committee of Wesley Memorial hospital and a member of the firm of Holabird & Roche, who are the architects.

"The home will be the first of its type ever erected," said Mr. Thielbar. "It will have all the comforts of home and club life combined. In the English basement there will be a swimming tank, gymnasium, and various recreational features.

"On the first floor will be the parlors, library, and social rooms, arranged so that the nurses may entertain their friends with as much privacy as in their own homes.

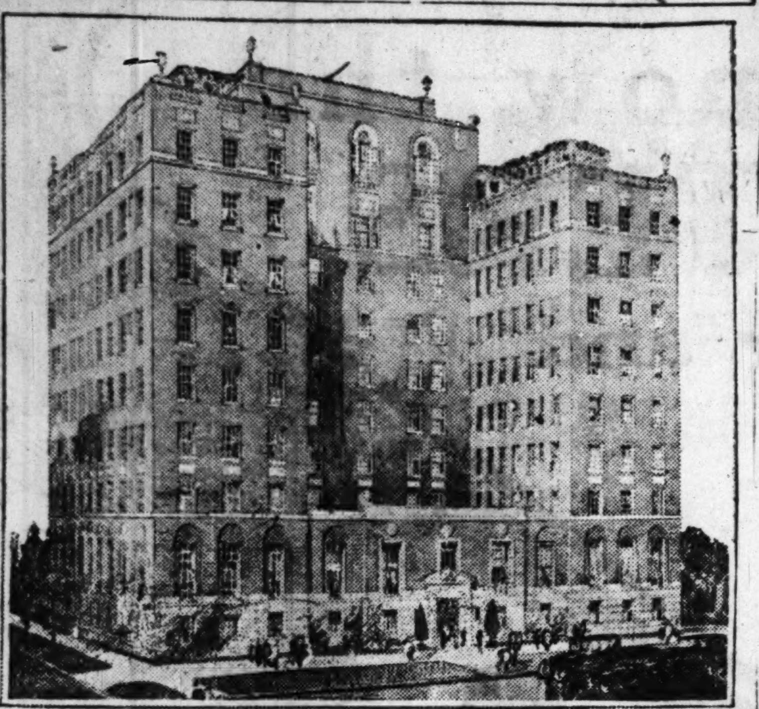
To Have Roof Garden.

"On the roof will be a roof garden. A part of it will open to the sky, with another part closed to suit varying weather conditions. Tennis courts will be built at the side.

"The home will accommodate 200 nurses. Each will have a private room, and each bath will be shared by only two nurses. Quiet rooms will be provided for nurses who work at night and sleep in the day.

"The plans have been maturing for a long time and have only been held in abeyance until the purchase of the ground which has now been made."

NEW NURSES HOME



Trustees of the Wesley Memorial hospital announced yesterday that a $500,000 structure is to be erected directly opposite to the hospital, 2449 South Dearborn street, for use as a nurses' home. It will accommodate 200 nurses, each of whom will have a private room.

Senate Votes $9,250,000 to Enforce Prohibition

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—The treasury appropriation bill, the first of the annual appropriation measures, was passed today by the senate, carrying $120,272,000, as compared with $118,806,000 authorized by the house. Included was $9,250,000 for enforcement of prohibition and a new provision authorizing the government to concentrate bonded liquor in a few warehouses to save expense of guarding. The bill now goes to conference.

Missing Man Sought in St. Paul; Rent Receipt Clew

Search for Earl Gardner, 1442 Melrose street, restaurant manager, missing since New Year's eve, centered on St. Paul, Minn., yesterday when a mysterious rent receipt was found in his effects by his wife, Mrs. Clara Gardner. The receipt was dated Feb. 7, 1916, and was in favor of "Mrs. Dow" of "215 Smith avenue, St. Paul." According to Chester E. Trask, general manager of E. W. Rieck company, a check of Gardner's accounts showed a shortage of $160.

GIRLS OF INDIA STREW FLOWERS IN PRINCE'S PATH

MYSORE, India, Jan. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The Prince of Wales was given a tremendous welcome upon his arrival here today by throngs of inhabitants, augmented by thousands who swarmed in from surrounding areas.

A long procession of bullock carts brought in the gaily attired spectators, who jammed all available space behind the guards that lined the royal route. All the bazaars remained opened and there was no sign of a "hartal."

PRINCE OF WALES.
[H. & E. photo.]

A party of young girls scattered flowers along the prince's path, to the accompaniment of hymns chanted in sanskrit by richly robed pundits.

Defend Government.

DELHI, India, Jan. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The Indian council of state held a long session today and debated the whole political situation of India. The council rejected a resolution offered by Rustamji Dhanijibhai Sethna, registrar of the high court of Bombay, providing for a joint session of both houses of the legislature to determine conditions for holding a conference of representatives of all shades of political opinion.

Sir Muhammad Shafi, member of the viceroy's council, and Home Secretary O'Donnell, defended the government's policy and emphasized the impracticable attitude of M. K. Gandhi, noncooperationist leader.

He said it was useless to discuss these questions with Gandhi unless he suspended all his activities and made a request for such a conference himself.

PRINCE A BIT BORED

BY THOMAS RYAN.
[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

BOMBAY, Dec. 20.—[By Mail.]—The Prince of Wales' reception at Benares seems to show that the people of that religious metropolis not only sympathize with the all-India congress campaign but that they are pursuing for the most part the policy of nonviolence.

The boycott was virtually complete, even more so than it had been at Allahabad the day before. Only a few tiny shops opened up in the afternoon. People clustered about the doorsteps in the bazaars, discussing the hartal (strike and boycott), but along the royal route and at the official functions there were only perhaps 200 natives of the ragamuffin type, plus the native officials, the maharajahs, the Eurasians, and the British.

Students Boycott Ceremony.

The student body refused to attend the ceremonies of conferring on the prince the decree of doctor of laws at the Benares Hindu university. They were exasperated by fifteen arrests of nationalist leaders the day before. The function was carried through amid a glitter of oriental splendor. In the stands were mostly officials and wealthy Indians, with a few curious or loyal low caste natives.

The prince played up, like the good sportsman that he is, but either because of fatigue or because he was impressed by the small crowd, he seemed to feel that the proceedings dragged. He leaned back frequently on the dais and looked up at the tent roof. His speech in reply to the chancellor was read in a high clear voice, which rose over the wailings of native babies. Unfortunately, however, his theme—the life of a university man—was addressed to the students themselves, none of whom were present.

ROAD BUILDERS DECLARE WAR ON CEMENT PRICES

State highway officials of the middle west declared a practical boycott on cement at present prices yesterday as the chief move in the fourteenth annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley conference of state highway departments.

In a resolution adopted by the conference officials of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, South Dakota, and Wisconsin declared that cement companies have failed to reduce prices of their product in accord with prevailing economic conditions. They accused the companies of capitalizing on the public need for road material and pledged themselves to make contracts involving the use of cement only in cases where the work cannot be postponed. This attitude will continue, they declare, until cement prices are "in harmony with reduced prices now in effect for all basic commodities."

The conference further recommended that state in which the laws and circumstances permit take steps immediately to investigate the possibilities of erecting and operating cement mills to supply highway construction needs.

It was pointed out that the new Illinois law gives the state the right to lease, purchase, or condemn manufacturing plants producing materials needed in public work. An appropriation of $5,000,000 was made in Illinois for the building and operation of a state cement plant.

WOMAN FINED AS DELINQUENT AID.

Miss Helen Bazis, 28 years old, 813 North Clark street, was fined $50 and costs for contributing to the delinquency of Francis Asay, 14 years old, 207 Institute place, by Judge Lawrence B. Jacobs yesterday.

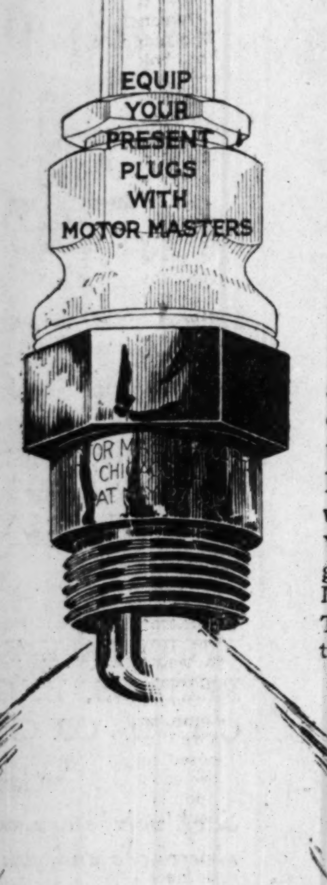
Every Car Owner Should Know the Merits of MOTOR MASTERS

Clean, Dry Spark Plugs Assure Power and Freedom from Carbon



Every automobile—new or old—should have an installation of Motor Masters.

Every tractor—every truck—every marine engine—should have Motor Masters.

Motor Masters SOLVE the serious internal combustion problems that are caused by hard carbon, dirty spark plugs, wasted power resulting from irregular or ill-timed explosions.

Motor Masters have been rightly called one of the greatest developments in automotive engineering, yet one of the simplest and least expensive.

Motor Masters cannot go wrong. They cannot cause trouble. If something else is wrong in the car, Motor Masters generally point it out.

Take oil pumping engines—those common nuisances with which so many car owners are familiar. Motor Masters so completely protect the firing points of spark plugs in such engines that the plugs cannot foul. Motor Masters do keep spark plugs clean—and that means a world of assistance to any oil-pumping car.

Motor Masters must not be confused with anything else. They are unlike anything else; not "transformers," or "intensifiers," but a different principle that is absolutely right, as proved by tests and service covering two years or more.

Motor Masters are not spark plugs. Any spark plugs are used with Motor Masters. Easily installed in a few minutes.

You are sure of clean plugs—freedom from hard carbon—greater gasoline mileage—and a livelier, "peppier" motor when you install Motor Masters.

The cost is very small—see price list. Compared with what the Motor Master principle does, the cost is nothing.

Motor Masters make old cars run like new—new cars run better. They give to any engine, old or new, that smooth, continuous action which saves the bearings, the connecting rods, and every part of the car's mechanism. Don't wait, but have Motor Masters installed now.

PRICES

$5.00 For a 4 cylinder car.
$7.50 For a 6-cylinder car.

FOX RIVER GROVE SLIDE IS READY FOR SKI JUMPERS

Largest Team Entry for Trophies Feb. 5.

SKI TOURNEY FACTS

Place—Fox River Grove, Cary, Ill.

Time—1:30 p. m. today.

Trains—Special trains will leave over the Northwestern at Madison street terminal at 9:30 and 10:44 a. m. and 12:30 p. m. They will return immediately after the contests.

Admission—$2.50, including round trip on trains and admission to hill. One dollar will be charged to each person who motors to the hill.

Entries—55 in amateur and profession classes.

Automobile route—See automobile section of The Tribune.

Probable attendance—20,000.

With ideal weather conditions existing and plenty of snow, fifty-five riders will compete in the national ski tournament to be held on the new steel slide at Fox River grove, Cary, Ill., today under the auspices of the Norge Ski club. The first event will start at 1:30 o'clock.

Never in the history of ski riding in the vicinity of Chicago has such a galaxy of star performers taken part in a tourney. The best riders in the United States, Canada, Norway, and Sweden will be seen in action, and records are expected to be broken because of the excellent condition of the slide, takeoff, and the ground at the foot of the hill.

Einar Jensen of the Norge Ski club, present American amateur champion, is in great form to defend his title. Ragnar Omtvedt and Fred Bruun of the local club may give the champion a contest.

In the professional class, Lars Haugen of Denver, Colo., rules favorite. He won the title in 1912 and 1918.

Rules to Govern Contest.

The following rules will govern the contest:

1. Character, 1 to 20 points.
2. No character given for falls.
3. One point shall be given for each foot jumped.
4. Thirty points deducted for a fall.
5. Touching with both hands on landing shall be considered a fall.
6. Fifteen points deducted for touching ground with one hand and two falls disqualifies until all standing jumps are measured.
7. Length of jump shall be measured from face of takeoff to where the feet land.
8. No jump shall be officially recognized unless the same is made in a regular tournament where more than one club is competing and where all rules and regulations shall have been observed.

The Norge Ski club has gone to considerable expense to make this year's tourney successful. Early in the week, when it looked as if there would be no snow, trainloads were brought down from northern Wisconsin.

ED LAMY ISSUES DEFI TO STAFF FOR TITLE RACE

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Jan. 21.—A challenge from Ed Lamy of Saranac Lake for a meet with Arthur Staff, American professional champion skater, today brought a response from Staff's manager, Julian T. Fitzgerald of Chicago, that all depended on Oscar Mathiesen of Norway, world champion. Fitzgerald announced he had cabled to the Norwegian asking if he was coming to this country this winter to defend his title. If Mathiesen should come, Staff would skate against him only, he said.

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER by Frank Smith

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND TWENTY-ONE did reward fighters!

A little more than a year ago this department began a campaign to cleanse the wrestling game and believes it has won the fight.

It found its path strewn with handicaps. It found itself the butt of jokes. It found itself threatened. It found it had to contend with some men who believed that the game should be run according to a code of their own manufacture.

During the year these men and others independently interested in the sport appear to have come to the conclusion that this department had taken a step in the right direction. Those who were intimately associated with the sport and earned their livelihood through its financial returns came to realize the scorn they had won for the game by adhering to laws of a selfish nature as laid down by them. They realized that the game must perish unless there was a new shuffle that gave every one interested a square deal.

At the outset this department pointed out that either the state or the city should have a commission to control the sport, that there should be some civil department responsible for its conduct. More than six months ago the city council took cognizance of the oblivion threatening the game and passed a resolution authorizing the mayor to appoint a commission to supervise the sport.

To some persons the mayor seemed rather dilatory in naming that body. After apparently carefully studying the situation, he named an athletic board, the personnel of which seems to have pleased every one connected with the game.

The naming of this commission doomed any ring of men who conspired to rule the sport here, and the house of cards which had been held together by devious methods for so many years fell in a heap. There was an immediate severing of connections that might in the least way point to collusion, for it was plainly understood that the commission would not stand for any nonsense.

The commission did not mince words in its edict to those persons interested in the sport.

The commission's orders could not be misconstrued.

The first organization to take advantage of the new conditions was one whose members are intensely interested in wrestling and who tried to the utmost to keep the game alive when its heart had almost stopped beating. The 132d infantry and Father O'Donnell, it's "fighting chaplain," were the first to break the ice after the commission had issued its pronunciamento.

The 132d wanted a pair of wrestlers who would give the soldiers and their friends a "run for their money." They selected Johnny Meyers, who claims the middleweight championship, and John Kilonis, a rugged Greek from Norfolk, Va., as the star attraction. These men had met three times under the old rules and put on some hard matches. Kilonis claims to have beaten Meyers once. This Meyers denies, but he does not deny that the Greek has registered some falls.

Along with a new deal for control of the mat game, new rules have been adopted by the commission which makes the match more in the nature of a boxing bout. Instead of stalling on the mat to gain needed succor the men will wrestle fifteen rounds of ten minutes each, with a rest of two minutes between rounds. This should make for a fast bout. We believe it will be a fast bout and a clash worth seeing. We believe the commission will see to it that the principals put forth all they have in them. The future of the game rests with the wrestlers themselves.

RUTH 'DROPS IN' ON LANDIS, BUT 'FORGETS' FINE

So far as baseball is concerned, "Babe" Ruth, the esteemed swatter, and Judge K. M. Landis, supreme justice of the national pastime, still are on opposite sides of the fence. Yesterday evening Mr. "Babe" made good a previous threat to call on the big boss, but the meeting developed nothing, because the noted athlete neglected to bring up that little matter of a suspension and fine plastered on him for going barnstorming after the world series.

Ruth went to Landis' apartment at the Chicago Beach hotel, accompanied by Leslie O'Connor, the commissioner's secretary. The visit was of about ten minutes' duration, and both O'Connor and Ruth insisted that baseball was discussed only to the extent of Mr. "Babe" asking whether or not he could take part in the training trip games.

To the question on the above point Landis said that the training trip was purely a matter between Ruth and the New York club.

HILLCREST CLUB OF K. C. AWARDED GOLF TITLE MEET

Detroit to Stage Professional Tourney.

BY JOE DAVIS.

Western amateur golfers will trek to the Hillcrest club of Kansas City in their quest for the western title this summer. The professionals will compete at the new Oakland Hills club of Detroit, and the juniors will battle at the Olympia Fields club of Chicago.

These awards were made at the annual meeting of the Western Golf association at the Congress hotel last night.

Kansas City golfers always have bee nstrong supporters of the western association, and have tried several times in previous years to secure the western classic. In th eearly attempts they last because their courses wer enot fully developed. This defect has been eliminated and at Hillcrest te players will find a torougly up to date course, and be assured of a warm welcome.

No dates were selected for the championships. It is probable that the amateur championship will be held late in June at Kansas City.

Oakland Hills New Course.

Oakland Hills is one of the newer courses of the automobile city, but its development has been rapid, and it is expected that the accessibility of Detroit will attract a crowd of the leading professionals from both east and west.

The reëlection of President Albert R. Gates and the regular ticket, was a foregone conclusion, there being no opposition. Guy Gregg of Milwaukee retired from the treasurership after five years of continuous service, and is succeeded by E. S. Rogers of the Indian Hill club of Chicago.

Slate of Officers.

The ticket is as follows:

President—Albert R. Gates, Skokie Country club, Glencoe, Ill.

Vice president—Charles O. Pfeil, Memphis Country club, Memphis, Tenn.

Secretary—W. W. Harless, South Shore Couhtry club, Chicago.

Treasurer—E. S. Rogers, Indian Hill club, Winnetka, Ill.

Directors—James E. Nugent, Hillcrest Country club, Kansas City; J. K. Wadley, Texarkana Country club, Texarkana, Ark.; A. D. S. Johnston, Los Angeles Country club, Los Angeles, Cal.; Sam W. Reynolds, Omaha Field club, Omaha, Neb.; Fred S. Borton, Mayfield Country club, Cleveland, O.

Nominating committee—Edward A. Engler, Glen View club, Chicago, chairman; W. C. Bartlett, St. Joseph Country club, St. Joseph, Mo.; Grant Chamberlain, Hutchinson Country club, Hutchinson, Kas.; Bertram Hopper, Kalamazoo Country club, Kalamazoo, Mich.; C. T. Fairbairn, Roebuck Country club, Birmingham, Ala.

Cling to Own Rules.

Chairman Charles O. Pfeil submitted a report telling of the conference which the Western Golf association committee, consisting of himself, President Albert R. Gates, and James Nugent, had last week with the United States Golf association committee. At this session the United States Golf association agreed that the Western Golf association could continue to play the rules on the stymie, lost ball, and out of bounds as before, but as local rules.

The W. G. A. therefore will play the same rules as the U. S. G. A., except such local rules as may be put in force. It will continue to play last year's stymie rule.

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Question.

Are you interested in watching or actively engaging in ski jumping?

Where Asked.

Madison and Clark streets.

The Answers.

W. W. Pitts, 338 Blackstone avenue, department store usher—I am not only interested in ski jumping but am interested in all out of door sports. For instance, I am a great believer in hikes, either summer or winter. I walk some ten blocks every day, rain or shine.

Miss Mary Meyers, 2441 North Halsted street, secretary—I have never had an opportunity to do any ski jumping. However, from observation I think it a wonderful sport, and it must be a fascinating recreation. I think a chance to go back to nature with its many beauties should be accepted.

C. E. Whitmore, Oak Park, real estate broker — For my part I enjoy the sport best when seen on the moving picture screen. It is thrilling. However, I like athletics. I believe that every man, whether he is young or old, should interest himself in some kind of athletics. It's a mental shower bath as well as of physical benefit.

Miss Margaret Reichman, 5104 Kenmore avenue, clerk — I haven't a particle of doubt but that I would be interested in ski jumping if I ever have a chance to see a meet. I have always been interested in skating, swimming, and outdoor sports in general. So some cold day some warm hearted person may take me to a ski jump, then——

E. T. Finck, 354 Normal parkway, lecturer—I was, I am, and I always will be interested in ski jumping. I was one myself once, and I didn't break my neck. To be physically active, whether it goes by the name of athletics or not, is the one natural and normal way to keep toned up.

IN the WAKE of the NEWS

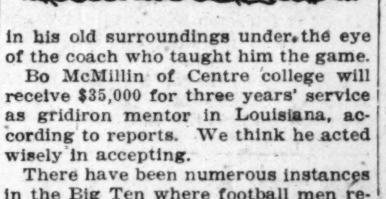
FOOTBALL STARS AS COACHES.

SHOULD the football star after graduation return to his alma mater as assistant coach, if there is a call for his services, or should he go to a post at another college?

This problem, based on a premise of loyalty, frequently has been put to notable gridiron performers in the past. In nearly all instances the decision, if favorable to alma mater, involved heavy financial sacrifice.

The Wake thinks loyalty in this instance is overplayed because the best results, both to the player and the team, are not secured. A star, returning the following year as assistant coach, attempts to teach players with most of whom he has been associated as an equal. He has learned his game from the head coach. Hence his authority is not as highly regarded as it would be elsewhere, as would the authority of an older man or a man from another college.

On the other hand, if the star goes to distant fields, he carries his own prestige as a player and he feels a freedom and independence he cannot feel in his old surroundings under the eye of the coach who taught him the game.



Bo McMillin of Centre college will receive $35,000 for three years' service as gridiron mentor in Louisiana, according to reports. We think he acted wisely in accepting.

There have been numerous instances in the Big Ten where football men returned as assistants and stayed for two or three years until the glamour of their undergraduate feats, which they could have capitalized, had worn away and their opportunity for liberal emolument passed.

If the player is continuing his studies in law or medicine, that of course is a different matter.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Minnesota put a crimp in Wisconsin's Big Ten basketball championship aspirations tonight in a fast, hot battle, 17 to 15. The game was full of sensational and tense moments, long dribbles, and startling long shots by the Gophers.

WARREN TAYLOR.

The first half ended in a 7 to 7 deadlock. Taylor started the scoring for the Badgers with a free throw and followed by a basket. The Gophers overcame this lead with two baskets, and the score then never varied more than two points until the middle of the last half.

Severinson then started Minnesota's winning flurry by tossing two, which were followed by a long shot by Kearney.

With four minutes to play, the Badgers staged a gallant comeback, Taylor and Gage each caging a basket, but were unable to come across with another tally. Both teams played the entire game under tremendous pressure.

Wisconsin's scoring ability was almost entirely lacking, except for Taylor, who made 13 of the 15 points.

Severinson played an exceedingly fast game, and managed to pierce a stiff defense for four counters. Hultkranz and Williams sallied into their opponents' territory in flashy dashes, but on the whole were held down by good guarding. Lineup:

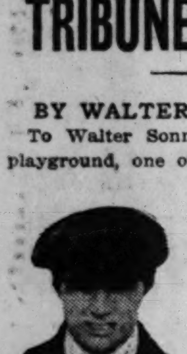
WATERS ENTERS 53 SKATERS IN TRIBUNE DERBIES

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.



WALTER SONNENLEITER.

To Walter Sonnenleiter of Waters playground, one of the most efficient directors in Chicago's system, goes the honor of making the largest team entry for THE TRIBUNE Silver Skates derbies to be held over a six lap course in Humboldt park on Feb. 5.

Director Sonnenleiter has nominated fifty-three skaters for the four races. In addition to the boys' junior and senior derbies six entries were sent in for the girls' junior derby and three for the girls' senior race. With such an entry Director Sonnenleiter is confident of placing a number of skaters in the finals of each derby.

A Sport Promoter.

The Waters director has always taken a keen interest in the boys and girls who frequent his playground. He was among the first in the city to stage skating this year, while in the summer he conducts neighborhood shows in which the "kids" take part in races and games of various kinds. Like other directors, Sonnenleiter believes the experience and confidence gained by taking part in THE TRIBUNE derbies will make the youngsters of his section better skaters next season.

Albert Goldberg, director of Robey playground, another hard worker of the system, has entered twenty-two skaters for the boys' derbies. The list is headed by Cornelius Ewert, a member of Chicago's Skating team which defeated New York last year, in addition to winning events in other cities. Ewert will be a contestant in the senior event for boys.

Entries Close Jan. 29.

With one week remaining before entries close, and two weeks before the contests are decided, close to 500 entries have been received. With some of the larger skating clubs and playgrounds yet to be heard from, it is expected the record entry of 588 received for last year's events will be broken.

The derbies are open to all amateur skaters. There are two races for boys and as many for girls. The age dividing line in both groups is 16 years. If skaters are 16 years of age they must race in the senior derbies, as the junior races are open only to those under this age.

No charge is necessary to enter any of the four derbies. The events will be staged free to skaters and the public. Those desiring to enter are requested to clip the coupons appearing on the sports pages and mail them as directed.

UP WITH THE "KALE" FOR PIN TOURNEY

ED STRASS, SECRETARY; LOUIS P. PETERSEN, PRESIDENT; COL. N. J. BUDINGER, VICE PRESIDENT; CLAYTON F. SMITH, ACTING TREASURER.

Louis Petersen, who is backing the world's classic bowling tournament at the Coliseum annex Feb. 9 to 25, depositing check for $5,000 with Treasurer Clayton F. Smith to guarantee payment of prize money.

CHICAGO bowlers may predominate in the world's classic championship tournament which will be held Feb. 9 to 25 at the Coliseum Annex. That was intimated last night by members of the eligibility committee of the big event when the long list of possibilities was scrutinized.

Dave A. Luby, chairman of the eligibility committee, declares that Chicago has more real high class bowlers than any other city in America, and cites the records made by local pinmen in A. B. C. and other big tourneys in all parts of the country. The lucky twenty-four to compete in the finals of the tourney will be selected from their records, and indications are that Chicagoans will have the call on all other cities.

Progress for the tournament is being made with rapid strides. The committee in charge, composed of Louis P. Petersen, Clayton F. Smith, Ed M. Strass, and Col. N. J. Budinger, report that the sixty-four leading alley keepers in the city are planning to back the big event, and that already many bids have been made for the box seats for the opening night.

Illinois A. C.'s reorganized hockey sextet sped off with another victory in the Chicago Hockey league yesterday, 7 to 1, over Chicago Beach on the latter's rink. Dandeno's work figured in the winning attack, but Hyslop's excellent defense at goal staved off many rallies by the home forces.

In other games, Canadian club defeated De Paul university, 4 to 1, and Edgewater Beach defeated Hinsdale, 12 to 4, the latter having three regulars absent, while Edgewater was strengthened by Chaput of Houghton and Blaine of Toronto. I. A. C. game lineup:

VALUE OF IMAGINATION.

IMAGINATION plays a leading part in auction bridge. Technical excellence alone will not suffice. Players must cultivate the ability to make a mental picture of an adversary's hand from the latter's play or bidding, or failure to bid.

West secured eight tricks.

When west led a small heart at trick two north could, and should, have placed at least two honors in diamonds in the south hand. Why was west merely marking time by throwing a trick to north?

Certainly the declarer would have tried to establish the diamond suit at once if his holding included three honors in diamonds. But north saw merely the importance of preventing the dummy from making a long suit in diamonds, and began at once an attack on dummy's reëntry cards.

At trick four north refused to win the diamond trick because he had not drawn sufficient inferences from the declarer's heart play at trick two.

After the sixth trick declarer had the game under control. He led the ace of clubs at trick eight in order to deprive north of an exit card, and by placing the lead with the ace of diamonds at trick ten finally forced north to lead from the king and one heart into the ace, queen.

The declarer never had any doubt as to the distribution of the diamonds after the ten held the first trick.

BIG TEN SPORTS NOT OVERPLAYED: JUDSON

Columbus, O., Jan. 21.—Athletics are not overemphasized in western conference universities, President W. O. Thompson of Ohio State university and President Harry Pratt Judson of the University of Chicago agreed in speeches delivered here last night before the Chicago alumni association of central Ohio.

Both made reference to the recent statement of President Lowell of Harvard that too much importance was being attached to intercollegiate sports.

"The victory of our football team at Princeton last year came as a surprise to many easterners, who had not considered such a thing possible," declared Dr. Judson.

Easterners Awaken.

"Some of the eastern colleges do not appreciate middle western institutions to the fullest extent, and they occasionally awake to a situation similar to that recently stated by President Lowell, in regard to athletics, and mention it as if it had never been discovered before.

"We long ago met the situation outlined by President Lowell and under our present system we have no fear of athletics assuming too great importance. President Lowell is right in saying that the primary purpose of an educational institution is education."

Sport Not Overemphasized.

"Athletics at Ohio State have not been overemphasized and I believe the same is true of other western conference schools," said President Thompson. "Limitations placed upon the number of football games by conference rules have eliminated that. Sixteen or seventeen years ago we were confronted with a threat of that nature, but it no longer exists."

Unconcerned over either zero weather, blizzard, or thaw, two high gear football machines will clash this afternoon when the Goshen (Ind.) All Stars play Morris Supremes at 3 o'clock on the indoor tanbark gridiron at the International amphitheater, 42d and Halsted streets.

The Supremes will be fortified with some of the best pro football talent that appeared in Chicago the last fall, having Al Nesser and Fritz Pollard of Akron eleven, Guy Chamberlain of Staleys, Jimmy Conzelman, former Rock Island mainstay; Joe Carey of Green Bay, Specht of Canton, and Zoia of Notre Dame. In Chamberlain and Nesser the Supremes will have two of the greatest all around wing men the game has produced. Goshen All Stars will be represented by a collection of former minor college stars of repute through Indiana and Ohio, whose tackling is a feature. Lineup:

FRIEBERG SEEKS GO WITH ZBYSZKO AT K. OF P. SHOW

John Frieberg, Chicago's aspirant to the world's heavyweight championship, is entitled to a match with Stanislaus Zbyszko, in the opinion of the Swedish wrestler's host of admirers, who have asked promoters of the Knights of Pythias all-star match at the Coliseum Feb. 22 to give Frieberg a chance. The match is pending and may be closed before the end of the week.

Frieberg himself is confident that he can make a better showing against Zbyszko than any of the so-called topnotchers of the game. He declares that neither Ed Lewis nor Joe Stecher would give him a match, and that Earl Caddock also has refused to go to the mat with him.

"They won't give me a chance because they know they'll be beaten if they do," Frieberg said last night. "Zbyszko has defeated all of the contenders with the exception of myself, and I think he should give me a chance."

JOHNNY MEYERS AND KILONIS END HEAVY TRAINING

Johnny Meyers of Chicago, claimant of the middlewight title, and John Kilonis of Norfolk, Va., who will meet in the main event of the wrestling show to be conducted by the 132d infantry in the Second regiment armory on Wednesday night, will finish strenuous preparation tomorrow.

Kilonis, the challenger, who has been training in New York under tutelage of George Bothner, will arrive here today. He will make his first public appearance tomorrow, working with some of the best local middleweights at either the Arcade or Ferretti's.

First Bout Under New Rules.

Under the new rules, evolved by Ed White, the men must wrestle every second they are on the mat. According to conditions of the contest they will grapple for fifteen rounds of ten minutes each. There will be a rest interval of two minutes between each round. As a result the wrestler who does the most effective and aggressive grappling will be given the decision, if the match goes the limit. The same conditions will prevail if each man wins a fall within the actual wrestling time.

In order to award a satisfactory decision two judges have been chosen, who will assist the referee in awarding a decision, in the event neither wins the contest decisively by winning two straight falls or two out of three falls.

Meyers Depends on Wrist Lock.

Indications are that Meyers will rely on his double wrist lock for victory. Johnny can secure the hold from either an offensive or defensive position. He uses this lock to whip an opponent into a position to secure either a front body or head scissors, and then forces his man's shoulders to the mat with a combination half nelson hold.

Kilonis will depend on the hammer lock and standing crotch for success.

Col. Clinnin Referee.

John "Doc" Krone, matchmaker for the show, yesterday announced that Lou Talaber and Carl Furness will meet in the six round preliminary. Furness is a graduate of the University of Illinois and learned the game from Paul Prehn. Arnold Minkley and Frank Knitter, light heavyweights, will take holds in the six round opener.

Col. John V. Clinnin will referee all bouts. E. C. Delaporte and Emil Thiry will be judges and Walter H. Eckersall, timekeeper. Indications are a capacity crowd, with a fair sprinkling of women, will witness the show, the first to be staged under the direction of the newly appointed city athletic commission. Tickets are on sale at 129 North Dearborn street and 153 North Clark street at popular prices.

MAKING HARD GOING SOFT

JOHNNY MEYERS, middleweight wrestling champion, is shown here clamping on a double wristlock from a defensive position. It is one of his favorite holds, used to throw an opponent to the mat, where he usually is able to secure a head or body scissors to pin foe to mat.

FANS STIRRED UP OVER BURMAN GO WITH SCHAEFFER

JOE BURMAN.

The matching of Joe Burman, west side bantamweight, and Frankie Schaefer of the south side, has created quite a stir among local pugilistic fans. Judging from general conversation a capacity crowd will be on hand when the fighters trade punches at Kenosha on Feb. 3.

Schaefer and Burman worked yesterday at the Arcade. The former has agreed to make 126 pounds, while Joe must train to take off weight, in order to get down to fighting trim.

White Offered Garden Fight.

Tommy Tobin, local lightweight, who gained recognition in Brooklyn, will meet Mikey O'Dowd of Muncie, Ind., in the semi-windup to the Sammy Mandell-Eddie Ketchel match at Terre Haute tomorrow night.

Charlie White, local lightweight, has received an offer to meet Willie Jackson in Madison Square Garden on Jan. 31. If terms are satisfactory White will close the match.

Johnny Schauer, St. Paul lightweight, who will meet Ever Hammer aboard the U. S. S. Commodore on Friday night, arrived in Chicago yesterday to complete training.

Jole Ray Makes Debut.

Jole Ray of the I. A. C., one of the country's leading middle distance runners, will be a contestant in the amateur boxing show at the Acada today. Ray will be handled by Battling Nelson.

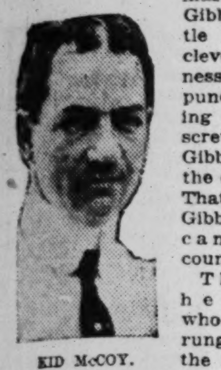
WILY KID McCOY FELLS GIBBONS IN 8TH ROUND

This is one of a series of articles describing mythical fights between boxers who never have met. Many arguments are caused by fans attempting to compare stars of the past with those who later achieved fame in the ring, and these stories are meant to convey what might have happened had such contests been possible when the contestants were in their prime.

The next story of a mythical battle, between Jack Johnson and Peter Jackson, will appear next Sunday.

BY RAY PEARSON.

Phœnix, Ariz., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Kid McCoy demonstrated that he is master of Tommy Gibbons in a battle replete with cleverness, trickiness, and hard punching, by slipping over a corkscrew wallop to Gibbons' jaw in the eighth round. That punch laid Gibbons on the canvas for the count and defeat.



KID McCOY.

These light heavyweights, who marched rung by rung up the ladder of pugilistic fame to reach the topmost heights, produced a battle of thrills—a struggle in which everything known in boxing was displayed. It was a struggle in which a keen and fast working mind played a major part, and because McCoy proved that he is the master mind of quick thinkers he was returned the winner.

Never has a man entered the ring with the cool, suave demeanor of Kid McCoy, this son of an Indiana minister, whose real name is Norman Selby.

Smiles as He Awaits Gong.

With a battle on his hands which meant a possible trip to dreamland, McCoy gave no indication of the seriousness of the engagement as he parted the ropes and stepped to the padded canvas for action. Gibbons, a man always dangerous, a clever, hard hitting battler, as an opponent caused no uneasiness to the crafty Kid, who sat in his corner waiting for the gong to start them into action.

A smile played over the face of the Indiana Kid as the gloves were laced on his hands, and occasionally he gazed across the ring at Gibbons. There was no smile on the face of St. Paul Tommy. He was all seriousness, in direct contrast to his opponent.

The gong sounded, McCoy and Gibbons advanced to the center of the ring, and the expression on the face of McCoy changed. Taking the place of the smile there was the famous McCoy sneer. That sneering, vindictive expression, and the confident air of McCoy which has been the goat getter of many an opponent, was working.

Can't Get Tommy's Goat.

Gibbons saw it, and so did the ringsiders, but it did not get the "nanny" of the Minnesota scrapper. Tom knew about the McCoy sneer in advance, and it meant nothing to him. He was ready to show his best, but his best proved futile against the clever, hard punching McCoy. It was a battle to be decided on fistic merits, and it was just that.

The confident McCoy was the first to pop, sending a light left to Gibbons' face and quickly sidestepping the return counter, a right cross which Tommy aimed for the jaw. Then McCoy came right back with another left jab, and this time Gibbons beat the elusive Kid out of the getaway by rushing in close and sending his right to McCoy's body. Next the tricky Kid feinted with his left, then essayed to sock a right to Gibbons' jaw, but Tommy cleverly dodged the punch, and they came to a clinch and the round found neither holding the shade.

Real Action Begins.

The real action began in the second session and continued until the eighth round, by which time McCoy had gained a big margin on points, but Gibbons always was strong and dangerous. These rounds were anything but one sided, for Gibbons gave a pretty exhibition of cleverness and landed several right hand wallops to McCoy's head and body, which forced the Kid to realize he was in a battle.

But the quick thinking McCoy always had his bag of tricks wide open, slashing to Gibbons' head with left jabs and left hooks and crossing with hard rights. In the fifth round he gave a wonderful exhibition of footwork and punching, and one solid left hook to Gibbons' jaw rocked Tom back against the ropes.

It looked as if McCoy might finish his man in this round, and he followed up his advantage in such an effort, but Gibbons resorted to defensive tactics and quickly recovered from the damaging punch.

Opens Up for Fatal Instant.

In every round McCoy sought to trick Gibbons into opening up so that he might shoot a K. O. wallop, and this sort of smart milling made the bout fast and thrilling. It was shortly after the eighth session opened that the wily Kid feinted the St. Paul man into opening up on the right side. Quick as a flash the Kid let fly his corkscrew left, the punch he had invented. It caught Tom squarely on the knockout button and the St. Paul boy fell to the canvas for the count which meant defeat.

TWIN BILL IN INDOOR LEAGUE

A double header at St. Alphonsus gym, Lincoln and Southport avenues, where the Ardmores and St. Alphonsus battle at 2 o'clock and the Belle Plaines and St. Patricks mix at 4, tops today's card in the Windy City Indoor baseball league. Barry will tackle the leading Rexos at Hebrew institute, and the Murleys and Central Turners will play at Central Turner hall.

OLD TIMERS WOULDN'T SHOW AGAINST MODERN ATHLETES

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

ARE modern athletes better than the old timers, or were the old time champions a sturdier race?

A few days ago I was talking with a well known athlete whose performances date back many years and asked him what he thought of John L. Sullivan compared with our later champions.

"Why," he said, "in my opinion Sullivan would have lasted a couple of rounds with Dempsey. You hear a lot of talk about the old timers, but I heard the same stuff when I was a boy, forty years ago, and the people then were always telling us what shines we were compared to the men before our day. I think we're far ahead of the old timers in everything, athletics, boxing, baseball, music, art, science.

Old Timers Lacked Chance.

"The old timers never had such chances as our boys have. Now there are a thousand boxers where there used to be one. Every school has its athletic sports and its coach or staff of coaches. Boys are much more advanced mentally, and that puts them ahead physically, too. Sullivan was a marvel in his day because where he traveled around the country very few men knew anything about boxing. But how far would he get today touring the United States offering $500 to any man who could stay four rounds? He'd find plenty of fellows who knew how to box."

Of course it is difficult to make any accurate comparison between old time boxers or wrestlers and modern champions. But in some sports we have actual times and measurements to compare, and the way these records go proves the modern athlete to be pretty fair. In amateur track and field athletics the 100 yard race was run in 9 3-5 seconds for the first time by Arthur Duffey in the intercollegiate championships May, 1902. Before that Bernie Wefers' 9 4-5 seconds was supposed to be unbeatable.

Plenty of Fast Sprinters.

Since then Dan Kelly, Arthur Robinson, C. H. Patching, Howard Drew, James Rector and Charlie Paddock have run in 9 3-5 seconds. Paddock has made that time in several races and some of the watches have recorded 9 2-5 seconds.

The 220 yard record was held for many years by Wefers and equaled at different times by Craig, Lippincott, and G. Parker. But the latest sprinting king, Charlie Paddock, cut this down to :20 4-5 in 1921, a performance that eclipses anything the oldtimers ever did.

May Do Even Better.

Paddock is the greatest sprinter ever known in either amateur or professional sport. His most remarkable performance, aside from his 220 yard record, was made in the Southern Pacific A. A. U. championships, held at Redlands, Cal., April 23, 1921.

In this meet Paddock broke four world's records and equaled one. He ran 100 yards in :09 3-5, equaling the record, and, continuing, covered 100 meters (about 110 yards) and broke a record with :10 2-5. The former record was :10 3-5. In Paddock's second race he was timed at 200 meters, 220 yards, 300 yards, and 300 meters.

The 220 yards was run three-fifths of a second slower than his own world's record, but he broke the world's records for 200 meters, making it in 21 1-5 seconds, the 300 yards in 30 1-5 seconds, and the 300 meters in 33 4-5 seconds. This beat Bernie Wafer's twenty-five year old record of 30 3-5 seconds. Paddock is still in his prime, and possibly improving. He intends to run another year, and may break more records.

Two Old Records Stand.

Only two great old time records stand today. In 1900 Maxie Long ran the 440 in 47 seconds even, on a straightaway track. He was timed in 42 1-5 seconds at 400 yards. The 400 yard run is not included in the usual athletic program. Also there are few quarter miles run on a straightaway. But Maxie Long's record, made twenty-two years ago, has not been touched. Long ran a quarter mile around two turns at Travers island in 47 4-5 seconds. Ted Meredith bettered this performance in 1916 when he ran around one turn in 47 2-5. These performances all eclipse any middle distance running of earlier times.

Charlie Kilpatrick's half mile record lasted many years, and such great runners as Sheppard and Parsons could not crack it. Emilo Lunghi of Italy broke it first, but Ted Meredith's half mile in 1:52 1-5, in 1916, lowered it more than 2 seconds.

W. G. George was the great mile runner a quarter century ago, and as a professional ran in 4 minutes 12¾ seconds. His amateur record was first broken by John Paul Jones with a mile in 4 minutes 14 2-5 seconds, run in open scratch competition in the Intercollegiate meet.

Goulding's walking records cut big chunks from the old times along in 1911 to 1915.

Feats by Kraenzlein.

Alvin Kraenzlein of Pennsylvania was the great athlete of his day, making hurdling and broad jumping records. His :23 3-5 for the 220 yard low hurdles in 1898 was a marvelous performance and still stands, although equaled by Wendell in 1913 and Robert Simpson in 1916. But Kraenzlein's 120 yard hurdle record has been beaten by Garrells, Smithson, Kelly, Murray, and others.

When the race was run in :15 it was thought the limit of speed had been reached, but Robert Simpson eclipsed all other performances in 1916—a great athletic year—just before the war caused a temporary lapse in sports, by running in :14 3-5. Earl Thompson has been timed in :14 2-5. Kalehmainen has broken nearly all distance records up to ten miles.

The high jump of 6 feet 4⅝ inches by Dan Sweeney twenty-five years ago remained a record until Horine cleared 6 feet 7 inches in 1912. Beeson of California beat that five-sixteenths of an inch in 1914.

Ewry's Marks Unbeaten.

Ray C. Ewry's standing jump records, made in various Olympic meets, displaced all old time marks and are unequaled today. A quarter century ago Jim Mitchell's hammer throw of 145 feet was supposed to be unbeatable, but Pat Ryan threw over 189 feet in 1913.

Thirty-four feet was a great heave with the 56 pound weight in the days of John L. Sullivan. Today McGrath, Ryan, and McDonald have tossed the big hunk of lead over 40 feet. The world's shot putting record stood at 47 feet for years, made by George Gray. Ralph Rose in 1919 put it 51 feet.

The discus record was held by Robert Garrett of Princeton back in 1896 and was less than 100 feet. Today a dozen athletes are throwing more than 140 feet. Arlie Mucks threw 155 feet from a seven foot circle, and Jim Duncan over 156 feet from the Olympic 8 foot 2½ inch circle.

Judging by improving athletic records, the old timers wouldn't make much of a showing today in any line of sport.

WHO WON THIS GAME?

BELOIT, Wis., Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Beloit college, after having won a 29 to 17 basketball game from Carroll college last night, today was ruled by the Beloit athletic board technical losers. Action was due to the insertion of Fall Weigert, forward, into the game two minutes before it closed. His appearance was due to a misunderstanding, as he had been making up some studies and it was supposed by him and Coach Tommy Mills that his ineligibility had been dissolved. It proved otherwise and Beloit association declared the game forfeited. Coach Boone of Carroll has declined to accept the decision of Beloit, and says the game belongs to Beloit.

'I BROKE NO RULE,' DIETZ'S ANSWER IN GRID 'AFFAIR'

Lafayette, Ind., Jan. 21.—Coach William H. [Lone Star] Dietz, who is charged with having offered financial inducements to high school athletes on the Pacific coast to play football at Purdue, by Prof. Leslie J. Ayer of Washington university, today made a statement in which he denied having broken the conference rules.

Dietz, who was to have been reengaged as coach at Purdue, will not return in that capacity, and Purdue will have to secure a new football mentor.

Answer by Dietz.

Dietz's answer to the charges, which appeared in The Exponent, the official Purdue university press organ today, follows:

"I desire to correct the statement in the press that I made a confession to the charges preferred against me by the University of Washington relative to improper conduct toward high school athletes of the northwest, it having been stated that the alleged "confession" was made before President Marshall of Purdue, Athletic Director Kellogg, and Prof. Moran.

"What I did" confess to was having sent telegrams to Dick Hanley at Pendleton, Ore., and having had correspondence with him relative to scouting for football material among the high schools in his territory. I "confessed" also that I wired Hanley $100 from Lodi, Wis., for traveling expenses.

Money Is Returned.

"Apparently the bank at Everett notified the University of Washington. I received the $100 back yesterday. I never sent George Wilson or Williams, as reported, $100 or any other amount, nor did I have anything to do with sending any money to any other athlete.

"When I had the first meeting with the faculty committee there was no definite information as to what the charges of the University of Washington were, other than that I had requested Hanley to do some scouting which I did "confess" to. I maintained then and still maintain that I broke no conference rules when I did that. My contract for coaching at Purdue expired Nov. 20. I had no connection with Purdue as was evidenced by the fact that at the coaches' conference in New York City in December, Director Kellogg represented Purdue.

Didn't Make Offers.

"I never approached by wire, word of mouth, or letter any young men, as charged by the University of Washington. I never authorized Dick Hanley to offer any athlete $100 a month or any other salary. When President Marshall read me a telegram from the University of Washington that they had a copy of a letter written by Hanley to his brother, also copies of telegrams to athletes, I could not deny it, although I had no knowledge of it.

FITZ AND HORAN IN IRISH COLORS FOR BIKE RACE

Tom Fitzsimmons and Harry Horan will again carry the colors of the Irish republic when they start in the six day bike race at the Coliseum on Feb. 12. Their entries were accepted yesterday by Manager "Paddy" Harmon.

These youngsters were the sensation of the last two six day races here. At the Coliseum race last winter they gained a lap on the field in the final hour of sprinting when every rider in the race was going at top speed. They made their jump a couple of minutes too late to win the race, and, under the system of point scoring then used, were given second place.

The youngsters are of pure Irish stock, but when the United States entered the war both were among the first to volunteer for army service and both went overseas, Horan in the aviation and Fitzsimmons in the infantry.

WHEAT REACHES NEW HIGH MARK ON PRESENT RISE

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Wheat showed more activity than for some time past, and with a larger speculative trade prices advanced sharply to a new high on the present upturn and closed within a fraction of the top with net gains of 1⅛@1⅞c, with May leading. Corn closed ¼c higher and oats ⅜@½c higher while rye was up 1¼c. Buying by packers advanced provisions and pork gained 50c, lard 15@20c and short ribs 12½@15c.

At the outside figure May wheat showed 7⅜c above the low of the previous week, and has more than regained the decline which resulted from unfavorable financial conditions. For the week net gains were 2⅜@4½c, with May showing the most strength, due to the statistical position. Corn held within narrow limits, and despite the big movement gained ⅝@1c, while oats were up ¾@⅞c and rye 3⅝c. Trade in provisions has broadened considerably, and lard gained 55@62½c and short ribs 75@77½c for the week.

Local Traders Sell.

Local traders were disposed to take the selling side of May early in the absence of developments overnight that strongly favored the bulls. Buying on an early decline was of an excellent character and headed by strong commission houses. This absorbed the surplus in the pit and when shorts started to cover they found offerings light, an advance of nearly 3c from the inside figures following with the finish about the top. Some stop loss orders were caught on the way up.

Western Kansas and Oklahoma remain dry, while the eastern sections of the two states received two to four inches of snow, although the latter were not suffering from drought. July, however, went to around 13c under the May at the last against about 12c the previous day.

Export and milling demand was rather slow. Liverpool reported a lessening of pressure from Argentina. Australia shipped nearly 6,000,000 bu wheat during the last week, suggesting total world's exports of around 15,000,000 bu, the largest in weeks. The bulk of the Australian wheat went to the United Kingdom. Premiums at Minneapolis advanced 1@2c, with dark No. 1 northern at 22c over May.

Corn Slightly Higher.

Corn made only a moderate response to the strength in wheat and at the outside figure was only fractionally above the previous day's close. Cash houses were fair sellers against purchases to arrive, and there was also selling of May corn against purchases of May oats in the way of spreading. Country offerings were fair, but in the main the grain went to Baltimore for direct export. Deliveries on January contracts were 40,000 bu.

Oats showed more activity than corn and, with sentiment more bullish than for some time past and prospects that the visible supply would commence to decrease rapidly in the immediate future, an advance was easily attained. Prices are the highest in over two weeks. Cash houses bought July and sold May. Eastern demand is fair and southern markets outbidding Chicago in Iowa.

Eastern interests were moderate buyers of rye futures and local traders were also on that side. Offerings were light on the way up. Export demand slow.

Packers Buyers of Lard.

Packers were on the buying side of lard and, with a lack of hedging pressure and help from the local element, an advance was easily attained. The selling was mainly in the way of realizing by scattered longs. Strength in hogs and prospects for smaller receipts this week had some effect. Packing at Chicago for the season to date aggregates 1,621,000, against 1,903,000 last year. Deliveries on January contracts were 250 brls pork and 1,000,000 lbs lard. Prices follow:

WORLD'S·GRAIN MARKET·NEWS

Better markets for grain, with possibly higher prices for wheat, corn, and oats, and a larger export movement of corn and oats are in prospect through a movement started by officials of the Chicago Board of Trade in connection with some of those in outside markets. The corn belt finance committee, with the aid of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and the coöperation of the War Finance corporation, is also to help. A conference was held Friday in Chicago with this end in view, and the work is to be taken up in Washington with Secretary Wallace, and is to be considered at the agricultural conference there which starts tomorrow, and will last most of the week.

It is proposed to seek congressional action to enable the War Finance corporation to grant European countries a large line of credit, which will enable them to buy our corn and oats in large volume and absorb our excess of supplies. Europe needs great quantities of feedstuffs, owing to short crops last year. Northern Italy alone has suffered the most severe drought in 300 years. By helping European countries the farmers in the United States will also be benefited.

At the conference here Friday the situation was thoroughly canvassed. It was also shown that the oat farmers were receiving only $7.50 an acre for their crop, while in the corn sections they were getting $14.85 through marketing operations and a great deal more from feeding live stock. Supplies of oats on the farms are said to be the lightest in years, and Russia and other countries, it is said, need oats for seed and for feeding horses during the spring work. It also will be necessary to export horses to Russia, it is said.

Those best informed on the wheat situation presented a showing at the conference indicating the poorest outlook known for the coming crop in the southwest, and it is feared that unless prospects improve it will be necessary to advance prices to a level where exports to Europe will be shut off, as there may not be enough raised this year to furnish an exportable surplus.

Heavy buying of May wheat and corn yesterday was attributed to the leading local interest, who have been absorbing wheat for a week. Local trading elements were more disposed to go with the market yesterday and in the face of profit taking and week-end evening up prices for wheat held well, the latter advancing 2c, while corn practically stood still, although making a small net gain for the day. With any outside encouragement in the way of buying and a little more constructive news it is expected that wheat will work irregularly higher.

Robert McDougal, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, left for Washington to attend the agricultural conference there, which opens tomorrow. He is to deliver an address at the meeting on Wednesday.

A fair export business in flour was closed by a local mill yesterday on top of the previous sales of the last few days.

"What Is the Most Profitable Thing I Can Do with $1,000?"

SUCH A VITAL ANSWER was given to this question—an answer ringing so true, so filled with conviction—that we feel fortunate in being able to pass it on to you. The experienced investor who made this answer said:

Every Dollar Safe

"PUT your $1,000 into the latest North Side 7% Real Estate Bond Issue if you want to make the most of your money—into a bond of the Eastnor Manor Apartments. I'll tell you why.

"First—Behind these bonds is eighty-seven years of investment experience. Every dollar I ever put into a bond sold by H. O. STONE & CO. is safe or else it became due and was paid off on the dot. They protect your interests until you get every penny you invest.

Cash Best Secured

"Second—Your money will be secured in absolutely the best way that bankers, financiers, law makers and ordinary money lenders ever devised—by a First Mortgage on ground and improvements producing an income.

"The Bond I tell you to get—one of the Eastnor Manor Apartments—is part of a $350,000 issue secured by ground at the northeast corner of Brompton and Pine Grove avenues—just a block from Sheridan Road, Lincoln Park and Lake Michigan—and by a sixty apartment building. Thousands of Chicago people would like to live there—it's such a choice locality. So the building will earn four times the interest on all the bonds. And the owner can't do what he pleases with this income but each month must deposit with H. O. STONE & CO. one-twelfth of the money due the bondholders during the year. Out of these deposits H. O. STONE & CO. will cash your coupons and pay your bond when due. No waiting for your money.

7% in Real Money

"Third—and a Warning! You can buy so-called investments that 'promise' anything—10% a year—25%—50%—bonuses—a fortune over night! But if you want real money—paid when due year after year—and if you want to get back your $1,000 when it is due—7% represents the best you can get with such security as the Eastnor Manor Bonds. That's what they pay. That's why to invest in them is the most profitable thing you can do with your $1,000.

"You can buy short term Eastnor Manor bonds, but with interest rates on the toboggan slide, make sure of 7% for as long as you can—buy the 7-year bonds—and buy them quick! Such sound 7% bonds cannot last long!"

Please Ask for Eastnor Manor Circular No. T-122

Nothing we can add would enhance the value of this answer. These bonds are offered in amounts of $1,000, $500, and $250. You may also buy them on easy payments of 10% down and 10% a month. These deposits will pay you 7%—just the same as the bonds. You are invited to call, write, phone or use this coupon. Telegraphic orders at our expense.

The New York Times.

New York, Jan. 21.—[Special.]—Taken as a whole there was little interest in the financial markets today. Such movements of prices as did take place were for the most part within narrow limits, with final changes holding no significance. Foreign exchange rates ruled practically at the same levels as on Friday.

The one exception developed in the case of stocks, where quotations in the more active issues went to lower levels under the influence of profit taking sales, which were a natural sequel to the upturn of the preceding day. Total sales were in excess of half a million shares in the two hours of business, of which about 25 per cent was accounted for by the steel and copper stocks alone.

Gulf States Steel Drops.

Another break in Gulf States Steel, which earlier in the week had stood out prominently because of the rapid upturn, undoubtedly had a sentimental influence on the entire list of speculative issues. The decline amounted to more than 7 points, the shares closing at 64, which compares with a price of 51¼ at the close of the preceding week. How violent has been the drop in this issue, however, is best told by the fact that the decline from the high of early Friday amounted to 26½ points.

This simply emphasizes the position to which the market has been brought by the extensive pool operations which have been undertaken since the supply of time money at reasonable figures became plentiful.

Copper Shares Move Up.

Today's market presented a high degree of irregularity. While the steels and the motors showed weakness, there was strength to be found in the coppers and in some of the specialties. There is already something of an interlocking nature between many of the copper companies through stock ownership, and it would present no great difficulty to bring a number of them under one actual management with a view to reducing overhead. Utah, the leader of the porphyry group, was likewise the leader in today's upward swing of the copper shares.

The local traction shares gained a place of prominence because of the answer filed in the federal court in opposition to the appointment of a receiver for the properties. Both stocks and bonds of the Interborough and Brooklyn Rapid Transit showed advances. The most pronounced gain was made in Manhattan Elevated, which rose 7¾ points.

Bank Reserves Built Up.

More than half of last week's heavy decrease in the surplus reserve of the New York clearing house banks is regained in today's statement. The excess reserve increased $23,467,670, bringing that item up to $39,625,970. Loans decreased $25,561,000, and deposits $56,121,000. Reserve of member banks in the federal reserve bank increased $15,372,000. A contraction of $17,836,000 in government deposits brought the total down to $58,512,000. Loans total $4,430,234,000, and net demand deposits $3,884,281,000. Details of the statement, with comparisons, follow:

U. S. Has New Plan to Sell $100,000,000 Rail Issues

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.—Adoption of a plan to stimulate the sale of a substantial part of the remaining $147,000,000 of railroad equipment trust certificates in the hands of the government was announced tonight by Eugene Meyer Jr., managing director of the War Finance corporation.

Director Davis of the railroad administration has written to all railroads, of which the government still holds unsold issues, requesting modifications of the trust agreement to permit subordination of such portion of the maturities of these securities of any year he may determine. Under the original terms, Mr. Davis was only authorized to subordinate the last five maturities, namely, 1931 to 1935. The government will subordinate approximately 33 1-3 per cent of the principal amount of all maturities, and the director general will sell 66 2-3 per cent of issues unsubordinated.

CHICAGO CURB MARKET

Trading in the local unlisted securities market was of increased activity. The majority of issues displayed strength, although there were exceptions to the general trend. Inland Steel was erratic in keeping with the wild speculation in steel shares on the New York stock exchange, sales ranging between 51 and 55, the latest quotations at 52¾@53½. United States Gypsum continued to advance, the common selling at 32½, and the preferred at 97. Butler Brothers sold up to a high of 34½, closing at 33⅞ to 34¼, and Creamery Package to sales at 29. Northwestern Yeast sold at 325, while Wahl preferred was traded in at 92. Goodyear Tire and Rubber preferred was two points higher at 28½, closing with stock offered at this figure with bids of 27⅝, and the common was quite active between 12 and 12½. A good volume of trade developed in By-Products Coke common, which previously was inactive, sales being made between 35 and 36. There were a few exceptions to this trend. McCord sold off from 3½ to low sales at 2¾. Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes eased off to 25 to 27, and Consumers preferred, after declining to sales at 57, improved to 58 bid, offered at 59; the common was traded in at 4¾.

The motor and sugar issues were rather quiet, Packard common being neglected at 6⅞ to 7¼, and the preferred quiet at 66 to 68. Lincoln was steady at 4¾ to 5⅜. Stearns improved to sales at 22¼, closing at 21½ to 22½.

A heavy volume of trade took place in the public utilities at rising prices.

BUSINESS NEWS IN BRIEF

[Copyright: 1922: By Fairchild News Service.]

NEW YORK.—Importers again receive reports from their Washington representatives that the senate finance committee is preparing to abandon the American valuation plan. A reported substitute is equalizing exchanges on lines once proposed for the emergency tariff. The new plan has been discussed at numerous conferences in Washington.

NEW YORK.—Silk manufacturers reply to charges that they are attempting to stampede buying. The claim is made that fabrics are being sold on a basis of $6.50 for raw silk. The actual price is over $8, proving manufacturers have averaged costs in pricing their products.

NEW YORK.—The wholesale millinery market for spring is not up to expectations. Sellers remain confident, however, that later business will bring the average of the entire selling season up to normal.

NEW YORK.—Despite denial by large silk houses that a "combination" is pending, the Fairchild News Service is informed on good authority that actual progress has been made toward organizing on lines similar to the American Woolen company.

NEW YORK.—One large fur house is practically dominating the market. The entire trade is closely following its activities. The house is operating extensively in country districts through buyers who have taken goods steadily at advancing prices.

NEW YORK.—Millinery imports from Paris show extensive use of Milan. From Germany large quantities of flowers and feathers are arriving. American manufacturers have enjoyed a brisk season despite foreign competition.

NEW YORK.—Fleecy, plaid back overcoatings are expected to sell well again this year. Belief is growing, however, that hard finish cloth will be in greater demand as season progresses.

NEW YORK.—Silk houses report a heavy demand for grenadine for neckties to retail at $1. Road sales of the weave are increasing rapidly.

PRODUCE MARKETS

Butter was picked up readily Saturday and prices advanced 1c to 33½c for extras. Fresh eggs sold fairly at 34¾c for firsts, 1¼c decline. Live poultry prices were unchanged with ample supplies. Potatoes moved slower at 5c decline. Arrivals 30 cars and 97 cars on team track.

FINANCIAL NOTES

One of the rather surprising developments in the advance in motor stocks is that the accessory stocks have exhibited a tendency to lag behind the market. The sharp advance today in Martin-Parry, and some of the other stocks of this group evidently was a belated recognition of the fact that they are selling out of line. It was reported in the financial district that an agreement has been reached between the Martin-Parry corporation and the Central Motors corporation, by which additional light bodies will be furnished for the Chevrolet division.

Production of copper by the Kennecott Copper company for the year 1921 amounted to 64,763,420 pounds. In 1920 the output was 106,727,420 pounds and in 1919, 81,914,520 pounds. The company, it is said, can produce copper at about 11 cents a pound, so that even with current low prices a profit can be made. A further lowering of the cost of production is expected this year. The company has outstanding $15,000,000 7 per cent notes on which the annual interest charge is $1,050,000, but these charges are more than taken care of by the dividends received on the stock of the Utah Copper company, owned by Kennecott.

Interests close to the management of the Northern Pacific Railway company hold forth a most optimistic attitude in viewing the road's prospects for the coming year. The Northern Pacific has sufficient cash now to preclude the necessity for any new financing during the year. Assuming that December operations were no more profitable than November, it is estimated the net operating income will approximate $10,000,000 for 1921. This figure would be about 16 per cent better than the preceding year, it is stated.

Bankers do not hesitate to predict that the outlook for easy money is bright, despite the flurry of the week which has just closed. Most of them hold the opinion that the present 5 per cent rate will tempt back to the financial centers some of the funds withdrawn during this week.

Although the financial worries of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad were supposed to have vanished with the announcement of the $25,000,000 loan for five years, the preferred and common stocks have apparently taken no cognizance of the fact. The road will show earnings equal to about 40 per cent of fixed charges for 1921, according to officials, and in 1922 the company expects a steady improvement.

President Hedly of the Interboro Rapid Transit company in affidavit in the United States District court, opposing an application for a receivership, stated the net corporate deficit of $738,967 last July had been supplanted by actual surplus of $19,317 in December.

There were 639 commercial failures in the United States last week, according to figures compiled by R. G. Dun & Co., compared with 719 in the preceding week, and 485 during the coresponding week last year. Dun's Review says, while there are various good signs in business no development of activity along broad lines has yet appeared. Bradstreet's says business is slow, but on the whole fairly steady, with expansion featuring wholesale trade and industry as January advances.

The Chicago federal reserve bank reports the weekly movement of credits as follows: Debits to individual deposit account reported for the week ending Jan. 18, by 202 banks in twenty-four leading clearing house cities in the Seventh federal reserve district, aggregate $956,469,000, compared with $964,114,000 a week ago.

ANNOUNCEMENT

K. R. BEAK & COMPANY desire to announce their removal on or about the thirtieth of January to their own Building—The Beak Building—111 North Dearborn Street, Chicago

WE have heretofore offered for sale in these columns First Mortgage Real Estate Gold Bonds, secured by a direct closed first mortgage on the land and thirty-seven apartment building thereon, located at the southwest corner of 57th Street and Dorchester Avenue in the City of Chicago—designated as the Dorchester Apartments.

We are now advised that the apartment building located on the northwest corner of 57th Street and Dorchester Avenue (directly opposite), and owned by Stephen T. Mather, is also known as the Dorchester Apartments. We are informed that certain individuals believed that the bonds offered for sale were on the "Dorchester Apartments" and secured by Mr. Mather's property.

We desire to correct any such erroneous impression—and to that end we have renamed the apartment building against which our bonds were issued THE BEATRICE-HARCOURT APARTMENTS, so that no possible misunderstanding may exist in the future. Neither Mr. Mather nor his property is in any way connected with the "Dorchester Apartment" Bonds which we offered.

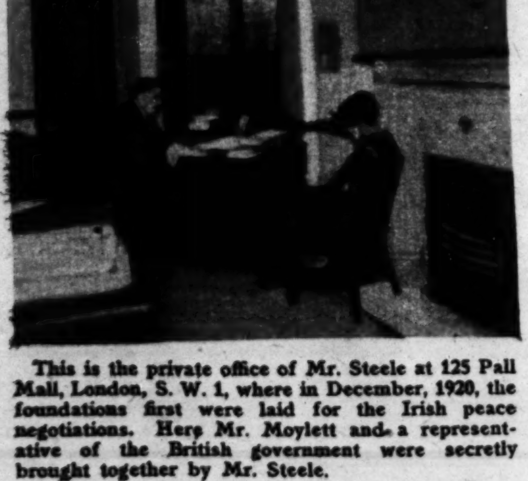
Left to right—Arthur Griffith, John Steele, The Tribune's London correspondent, and Desmond Fitzgerald, Sinn Fein minister of propaganda, photographed as they were emerging from the home of a prominent Dublin Sinn Feiner in September, 1920. Here some of the discussions between British and Sinn Fein emissaries (brought together by Mr. Steele) were held. These meetings later developed into negotiations for peace, and finally into the formation of the Irish Free State.

JOHN S. STEELE (left) and Patrick Moylett, who began the Irish peace negotiations over a year ago. Photo taken on the steps of the Dublin Mansion House, Irish Government headquarters, in December while discussions preliminary to ratification of the peace treaty were going on.



This is the private office of Mr. Steele at 125 Pall Mall, London, S. W. 1, where in December, 1920, the foundations first were laid for the Irish peace negotiations. Here Mr. Moylett and a representative of the British government were secretly brought together by Mr. Steele.

Another Big Tribune "Scoop"

John Steele's Part in the Establishment of Peace in Ireland

Over a year ago, through the initiative of John Steele, The Tribune's London correspondent (and at his invitation), representatives of the Sinn Fein first met with British officials in a series of discussions, which, begun in Mr. Steele's office and never ceasing until the peace treaty was signed, brought peace in Ireland and terminated a 750-year-old conflict.

The final result of these meetings brought together in Downing street Mr. Lloyd George and the very Irish leaders whose representatives first met British officials in The Tribune's London office.

John Steele's accomplishment in aiding the contracting parties to common ground ranks high in newspaper achievement. It is worthy of ranking with other great Tribune achievements. (Do you remember that the first copy of the peace treaty of Versailles seen by the United States senate was that presented by The Chicago Tribune in 1919?)

The Tribune's Foreign News Service is the most remarkable organization of its kind in the history of journalism—composed of men of the caliber of John Steele, who bring you facts in reporting the news of the world, unhampered, undismayed! No wonder The Chicago Tribune is considered a necessity seven days a week!

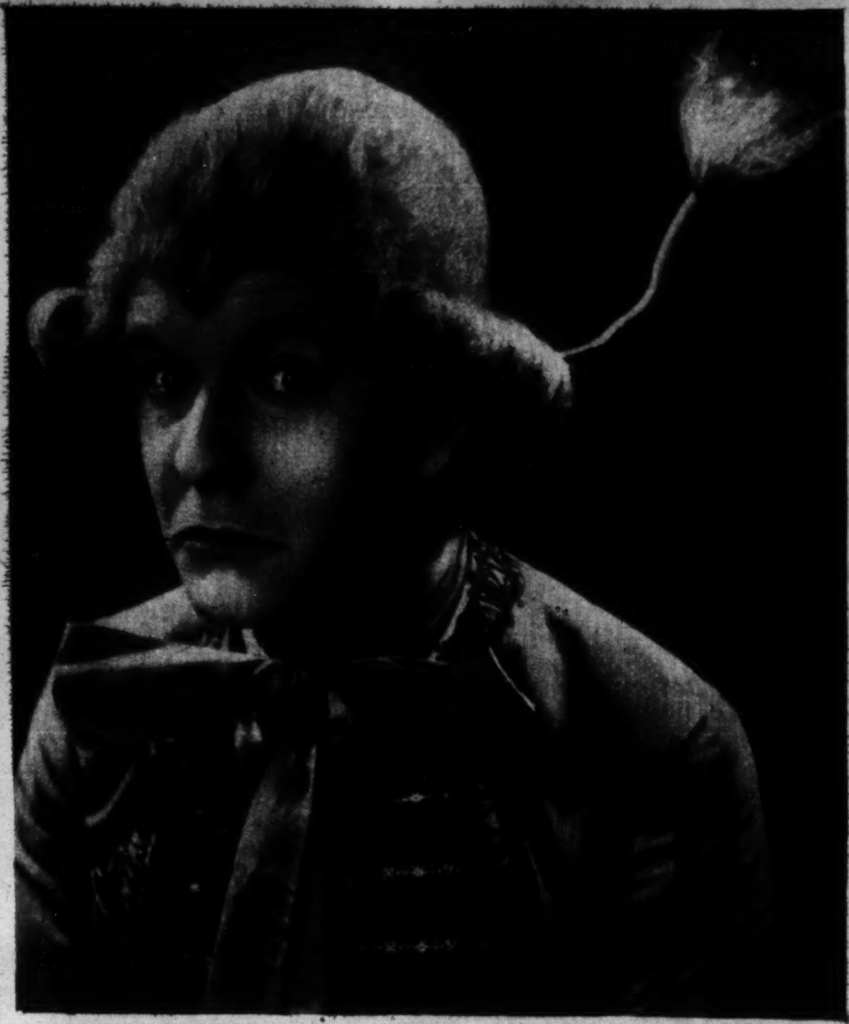
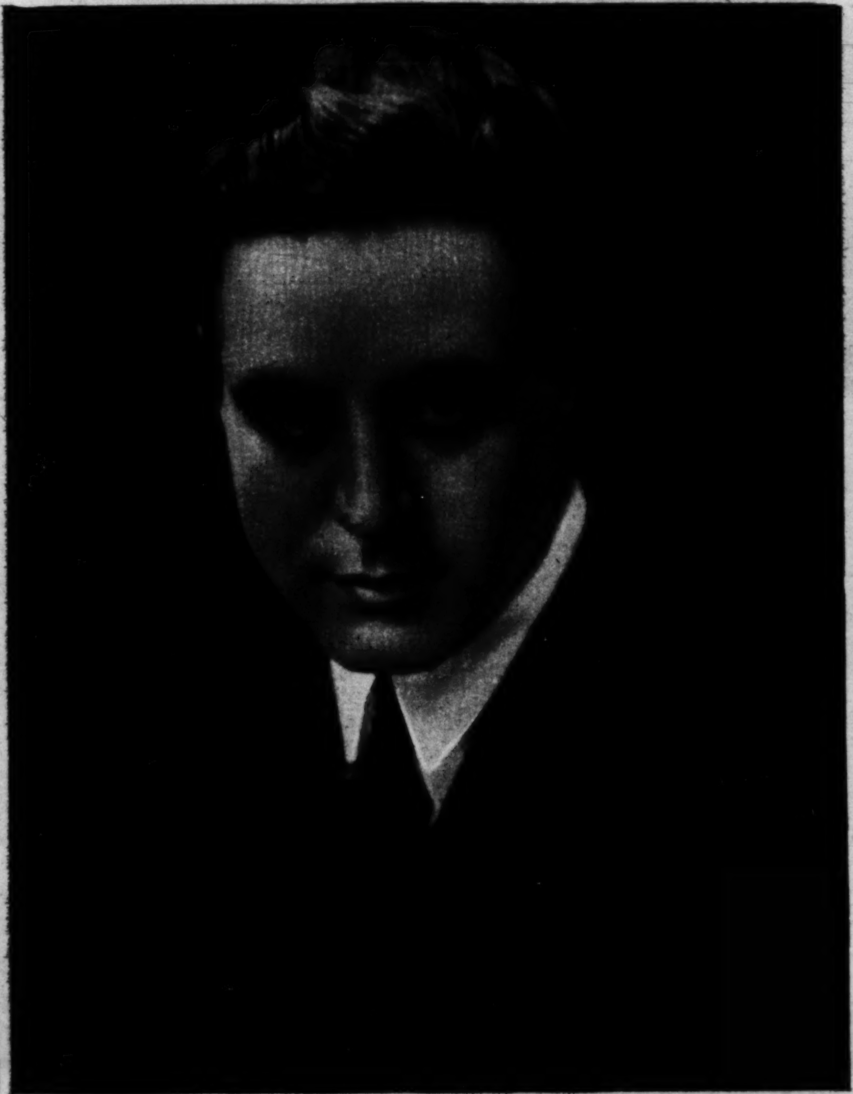
MARY MILES MINTER has had some new pictures taken, one of which we take pleasure in presenting you this morning. She is at present starring in "South of Suva," which is released by Famous Players-Lasky.
Mae Tinee.



CREIGHTON HALE appears as Picard in D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm." This picture is an adaptation from "The Two Orphans"—same being Dorothy and Lilliau Gish, and they do say the production caused Mr. Griffith one year of unremitting labor. Mr. Hale is an Irishman. He was born in Cork, Ireland, and educated in Dublin and London. He comes of a theatrical family and became a play actor at about the age when most youngsters are yelping with colic. He came to America with Gertrude Elliott in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow." His screen career started with Pathe. He has been with Metro. You have seen him in "Way Down East" and many other productions. What do you think of his pigtail?
Mae Tinee.



GEORGE WALSH has deserted (as of course you know) Fox for Universal, where he is busily working on a serial, "With Stanley in Africa." Mr. Walsh has always been reasonably popular and one hopes that he continues to make good.
Mae Tinee.

WINIFRED WESTOVER (Mrs. William S. Hart), despite Mr. Hart's admonitions to stay at home and be a nice domestic little girl, is, we are told, to star in Paramount pictures. Right away she shows him who's boss!

Just As Easy As It Looks

IF you don't know, from having tried it, the wonderful simplicity of the "GETS-IT" method for removing corns and calluses, you should not fail to learn about it. Nothing could be easier.

No matter how sore and tender, you will never feel another twinge from the moment you apply two or three drops of "GETS-IT." And no matter how firmly rooted, it may be peeled off as easily as one peels a banana, leaving the skin soft and unblemished.

Costs but a trifle everywhere.

She Doesn't Know

Today her beauty is unblemished; her step is light and quick, her smile is gay, her teeth gleam with the white of polished pearls. A fig then, for tomorrow!

Yet even now those precious charms are threatened by Pyorrhea and she doesn't know her danger.

It is a grim fact that four out of five people who pass the age of forty are marked by Pyorrhea for its victims. Thousands younger also suffer.

And in almost every case the disease might be prevented if heed were only paid to Nature's warnings.

Watch your gums! They flash the first danger signal.

If they are tender, if they bleed easily when brushed, beware! That is the way Pyorrhea starts.

If you have Pyorrhea symptoms go at once to your dentist for teeth and gum inspection and start using Forhan's For the Gums today.

Neglect is costly. For as Pyorrhea gains headway it loosens the teeth until they drop out or must be extracted. Deadly pus pockets form at the roots and germs seep throughout the system, causing many kinds of illness.

If used consistently and used in time, Forhan's For the Gums will prevent Pyorrhea or check it in its course. An excellent dentifrice, it keeps the teeth white and clean and the gums pink and healthy.

Brush Your Teeth With Forhan's — How to Use It

Use it twice daily, year in and year out. Wet your brush in cold water, place a half-inch of the refreshing, healing paste on it, then brush your teeth up and down. Use a rolling motion to clean the crevices. Brush the grinding and back surfaces of the teeth. Massage your gums with your Forhan-coated brush—gently at first until the gums harden, then more vigorously. If the gums are very tender, massage with the finger, instead of the brush. If gum-shrinkage has already set in, use Forhan's according to directions, and consult a dentist immediately for special treatment. 35c and 60c, in the U. S. and Canada. At all druggists.

ONE trial of Kloria for almost any skin disease will show you results never before thought possible. The way it stamps out barber's itch, eczema, and other skin diseases, almost challenges belief. The way it soothes irritation, itching scalp or itching anywhere is truly amazing. For dandruff, simply wet the scalp a few times and the trouble disappears: harmless to the hair.

This is the new and wonderful antiseptic, discovered in the world war, which, by scientific test, is over 40 times more germ-destroying than carbolic acid. This great germicidal power is what makes it so effective.

Yet Kloria is not poisonous, doesn't burn or irritate, is soothing, pleasant, and safe.

Test Kloria on a boil or open sore. Notice how it destroys the pus infection, ends the soreness, and heals with magic quickness. For cuts and burns, it insures quicker, cleaner healing than iodine or any old-time antiseptic or salve. As a mouthwash, it destroys the acid-forming bacteria, thus preventing tooth-decay. As a gargle, see how quickly it relieves sore throat and canker sores. Apply it to sore, bleeding gums (pyorrhea), and see if the soreness and bleeding do not disappear in one week. Harmless, yet more effective than poisonous antiseptics for personal hygiene.

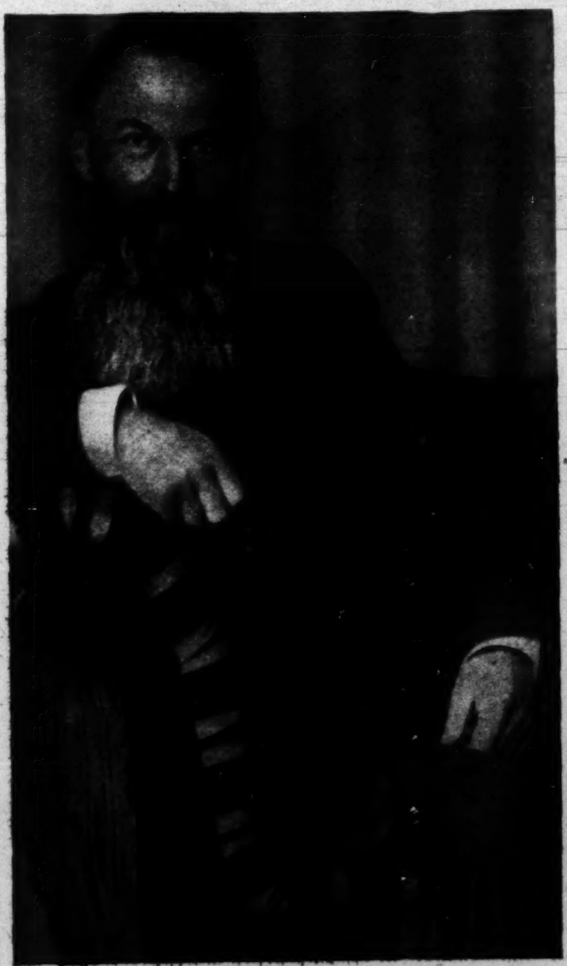
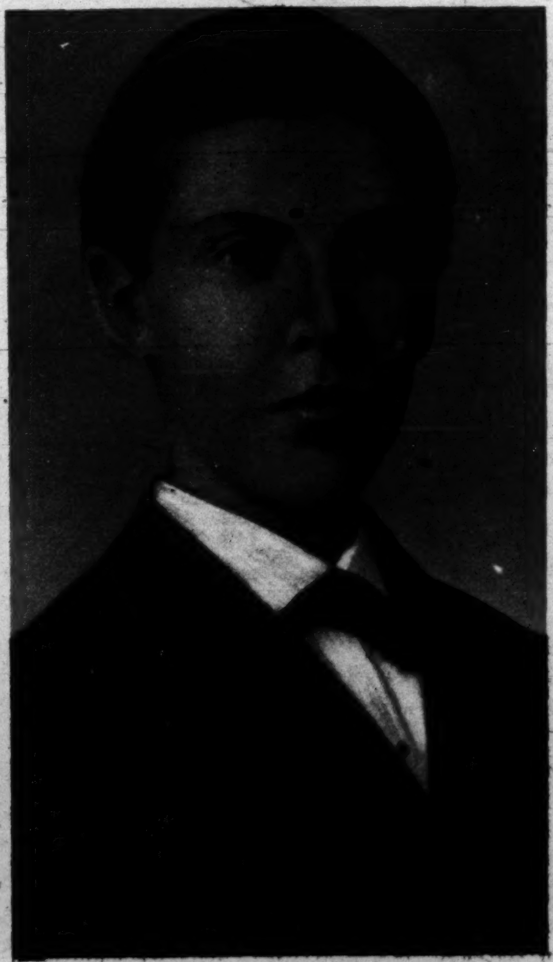
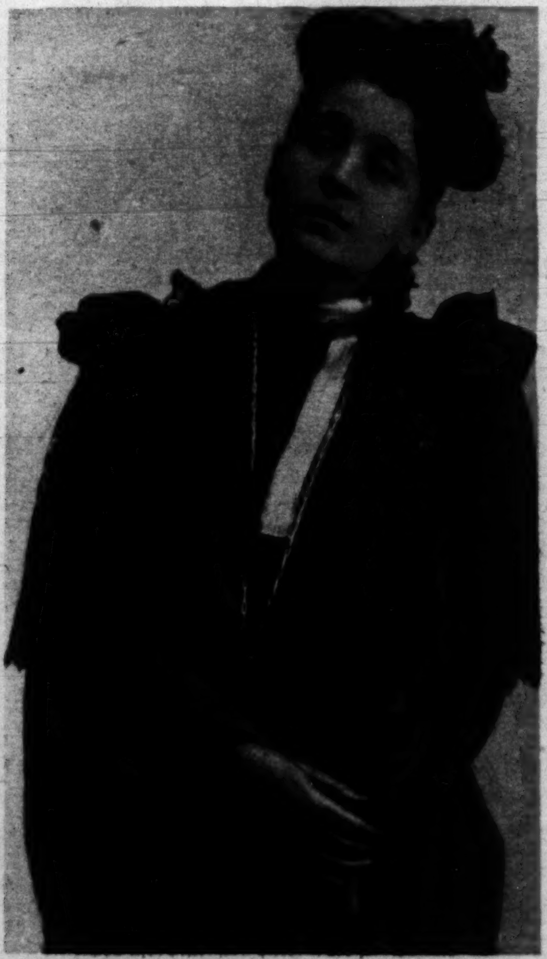
GARFIELD WAS NOMINATED? This is a picture of the Republican convention, held in the old Exposition building on the lake front, June 2-8, 1880. Garfield is shown in the circle. Chester A. Arthur was his running mate. (Photograph from the collection of C. E. Jennings.)



DR. ADOLPH LORENZ, the Vienna surgeon, made his first visit to this country? The daughter of J. Ogden Armour was one of his patients.



CHARLES EVANS HUGHES, secretary of state, looked like this? He was 14 years old then, and just beginning to dream of a brilliant career. (Photograph from International.)



ELEONORA DUSE, distinguished Italian actress, was at the height of her glory? By many she is regarded as the peer of Sarah Bernhardt.

Every normal skin needs two creams

To protect your skin against wind and cold, touch the face lightly with Pond's Vanishing Cream before going out

A daytime cream without oil for these complexion flaws

Roughness, chapping. If the skin is not protected against the cold and wind, it becomes rough and coarse. To give the needed protection, apply a little Pond's Vanishing Cream before going out. This disappearing cream contains no oil and cannot possibly reappear in a shine. It leaves the skin fresh and invisibly shielded.

Shiny face. Before you powder, rub a little Pond's Vanishing Cream into the face. It is absorbed instantly and cannot come out in a shine later, for there is not a drop of oil in it. With this softening cream as a base, powder just as usual. You will find that the powder lasts many times longer and that it shows less, for there are no rough places for it to catch on.

POND'S Vanishing Cream

To keep the skin really clean, rub Pond's Cold Cream into it at night

A cleansing oil cream to prevent these flaws. Use it every night

Wrinkles. The way to ward off wrinkles is to give your skin regularly a tonic rousing with an oil cream. Pond's Cold Cream is a rich oil cream that stimulates the skin, lubricating it and restoring its elasticity. By the faithful use of this cream, you can keep little fine lines from fastening themselves on the skin and forming real wrinkles.

Blackheads. The dust and dirt that clog the pores, working their way under the surface of the skin, help to form blackheads. Ordinary washing will not remove them. After washing the face with warm water and pure soap, rub Pond's Cold Cream into the skin until the pores are saturated with it. Let the cream remain on a few moments, then wipe it off with a soft cloth. This rich cream contains the oil necessary to penetrate the skin and rid it of every particle of dirt.

POND'S Cold Cream

Begin using both these creams today

Use regularly these two creams that every normal skin needs. Neither will clog the pores nor encourage the growth of hair. Your druggist and the department stores carry both jars and tubes in convenient sizes. The Pond's Extract Co., 131 Hudson Street, New York.

PHYSICAL Director Wallace, who makes men and women thin to music. His amazing accomplishments in this field have brought his Chicago institution an amazing amount of free publicity throughout the country.

IF YOU ARE TOO STOUT, reduce to music. To Wallace away one's weight has become a national pastime! Seven thousand have done so, by means of Wallace records; seven hundred here in Chicago.

HOW MUCH TOO MUCH do you weigh? A single week of Wallace's course may be all you need to get normal. Perhaps two or three weeks — for twelve, twenty, twenty-five pounds of excess flesh. If fifty pounds or more must come off, a few months may be required. But the course will surely succeed! There is only one result in the end!

FOR YOUR OWN SAKE refuse all advice to starve; under-nourishment gives one a gaunt, and wrinkled look. FOOD alone does NOT cause fat—or we should not see stout men and women who eat scarcely as much as a child. Wallace gives you things to do which cause your system to stop manufacturing fat, but his method lets you eat!

DO YOU REALIZE that the Wallace course is now so proven a success that doctors recommend it? That Wallace takes the first five pounds off FREE just to prove how easy it is? Don't let another Sunday come without your actual reduction begun! Mail this coupon tonight.

Up among the Titanic Himalayan peaks with Col. Howard Bury's Mount Everest Expedition.

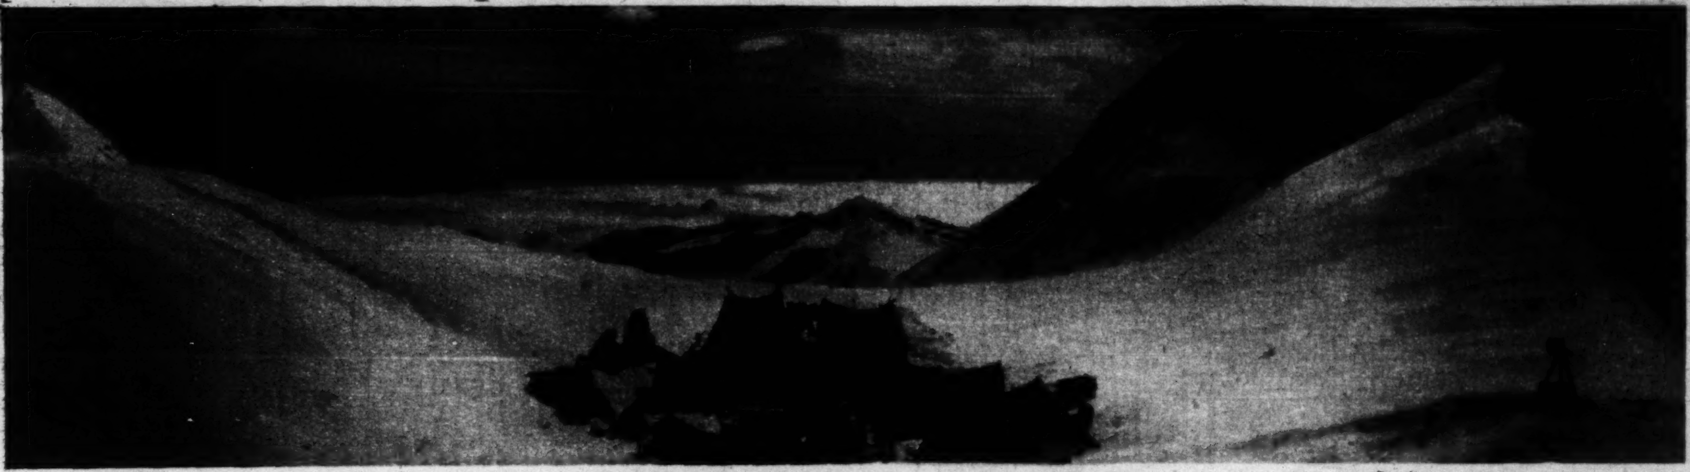
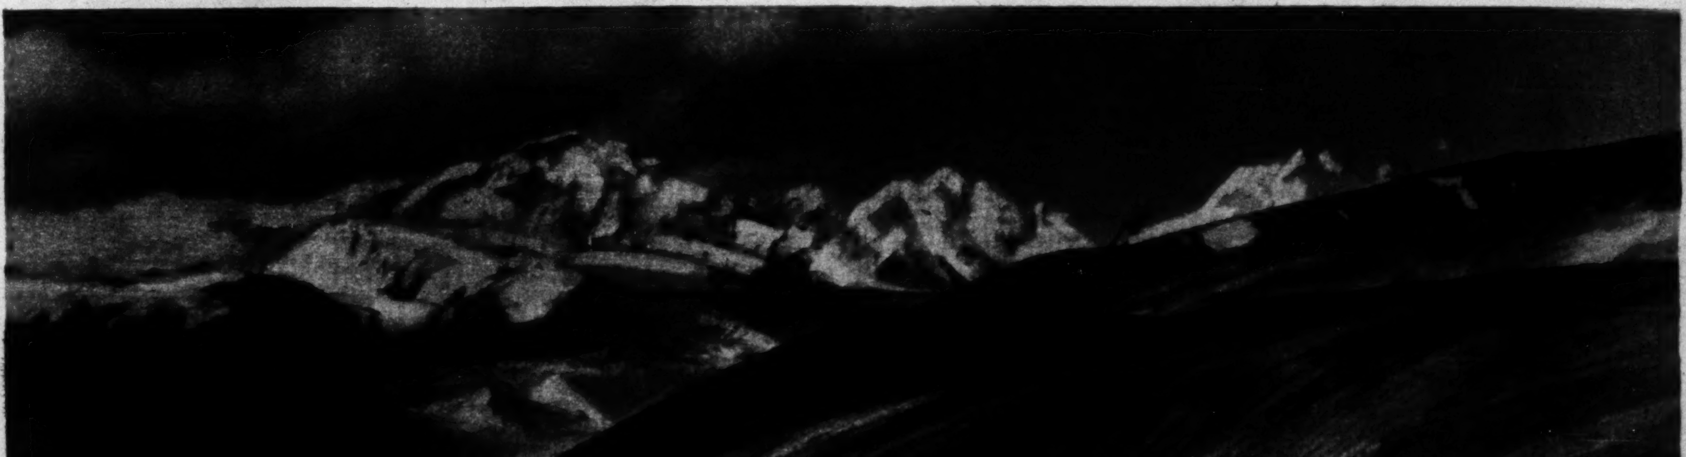
TRUDGING UP A SNOW MOUNTAIN 20,300 feet above sea level was one of the tasks facing the mountain climbers who sought to conquer Mount Everest. The explorers and their coolie burden bearers are to be seen at the left of the photograph, near where the sun is striking the white wastes.



TWENTY-TWO THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED FEET UP, and looking eastward from their windswept camp amid the Himalayan peaks, the members of the expedition saw this sea of clouds and mountain crests and snow and ice.



A STUDY IN HIMALAYAN CONTRASTS is afforded by this picture, showing a view across the Kyctrak valley. The ground in the immediate vicinity of the photographer reveals no signs of recent snowfall, but 10,000 feet higher up there is a mighty procession of snow-capped peaks.

THE FULFILLER

If You Could Have Whatever You Most Wished For, What Would You Ask?

"BUT then of course, sir, Mrs. Tolley will always have her rent ready."

It was Mrs. Stook who spoke; afterwards, when things had happened and passed, leaving nothing on which he could really place his hand, Maynard liked to think that those words had "struck him with peculiar significance." But in actual fact they passed largely unnoticed, mere débris on the freshet of Mr. Stook's speech as she stood in the doorway in the half fugitive manner befitting one who merely lingers for a pleasant word over her lodger's dinner.

That word had already lasted long, but Maynard did not repeat his previous error of asking her to sit down. That, as he was now aware, would have somehow savored of impropriety. Then again, in the manner of the tourist on the hunt for impressions, he was regarding her more as a type than as an individual. Standing there with apron enfolded arms and that outpouring of soft Devon accents, she seemed as purely literary a property as those purple china dogs on the mantel.

One diamond paned casement was flung back, and across the potted geraniums in the window seat the June air struck with an indescribable wild sweetness. Above the scarlet blossoms came glimpses of the distant Tors, purple and bistre under the mellowing light; the vast upheaved waste of Dartmoor, all granite and heather, implacably the same throughout the ages.

"So the Tolleys don't own their farm?" he asked.

"You might think so, for I've been told that in America it is common to own," Mrs. Stook agreed. "But up here in Dartymoor nobody owns, sir; it's all duchy property hereabouts, the duchy of Cornwall, which is crown property, though it is little enough the king knows of what goes on. Mr. Bragdon, over to Tavistock, he's the agent, and with him it's rent, rent, up to the Duchy Inn at Princestown each quarter day, or out you go."

So, from the coign of the respectably open door, Mrs. Stook rippled on, and in parallel accompaniment ran Maynard's thoughts. Dartmoor all about him, a land in itself, lifted a thousand feet above the softer vales of the Devon coast. A brooding sort of place, high and apart in its seeming openness that was still so strangely hidden. To Maynard that hiddenness, which he sensed all about him, came as a mental food, slightly hungered as he was by the sterilities of his western college. It was curious that the facts of life should be so the same wherever one went. This immemorial country, beneath its surface picturesqueness, linked by rent and toil with the dollar problems of his own Rockledge. Through the window he could see the Hanger-Down farm of which they spoke, three miles away, crouching under the jagged lee of Cockern Tor. Remembering its boulder strewn slopes, he wondered how the woman there, bleak as her own fields, could wring a living from that sparse soil.

As though in answer to the unspoken question, Mrs. Stook, having wrapped herself about a fresh relay of breath, went on.

"It is this quarter day as will be the test for Hanger-Down, sir, seeing the luck poor Mrs. Tolley had with her pigs this spring, and hard it must come to her at best. Quite well to do they was once; there's been Tolleys on the Moor for hundreds of years; but her husband was lost, horse and all, in Fox Tor Mire one night, a-hurrying home when she was expecting Elias. Since then it's been scrimp and scrape up to Hanger-Down, and now it is the pigs, twenty pound worth of 'em, a-dying on her in an hour, through eating twoadstools, they say. And she left with only that Elias, as is more of a hindrance than a help, poor innocent."

Unknown to herself, probably from her sheer relish in it, Mrs. Stook had the art of the born raconteuse; an incommunicable way of making her hearer see all these things from which she really spoke but did not actually say. Maynard found himself catching flashes back of her words. Pigs—he had never before realized that pigs could also be tragedy. But he could see them now, spread across the foreground in a riot of fat death; and against them Elias' lank figure gangling up the lane, his face, under its thatch of hair, half sensitive, half silly, wholly wistful.

"Ah, yes—Elias," Maynard murmured. "I have noticed him."

"You probably would, sir," Mrs. Stook firmly agreed. "Not that there's a mite of harm in him, but a bit mazed-like. There's some as say it was the shock of his father's death afore he was born, while there's others——"

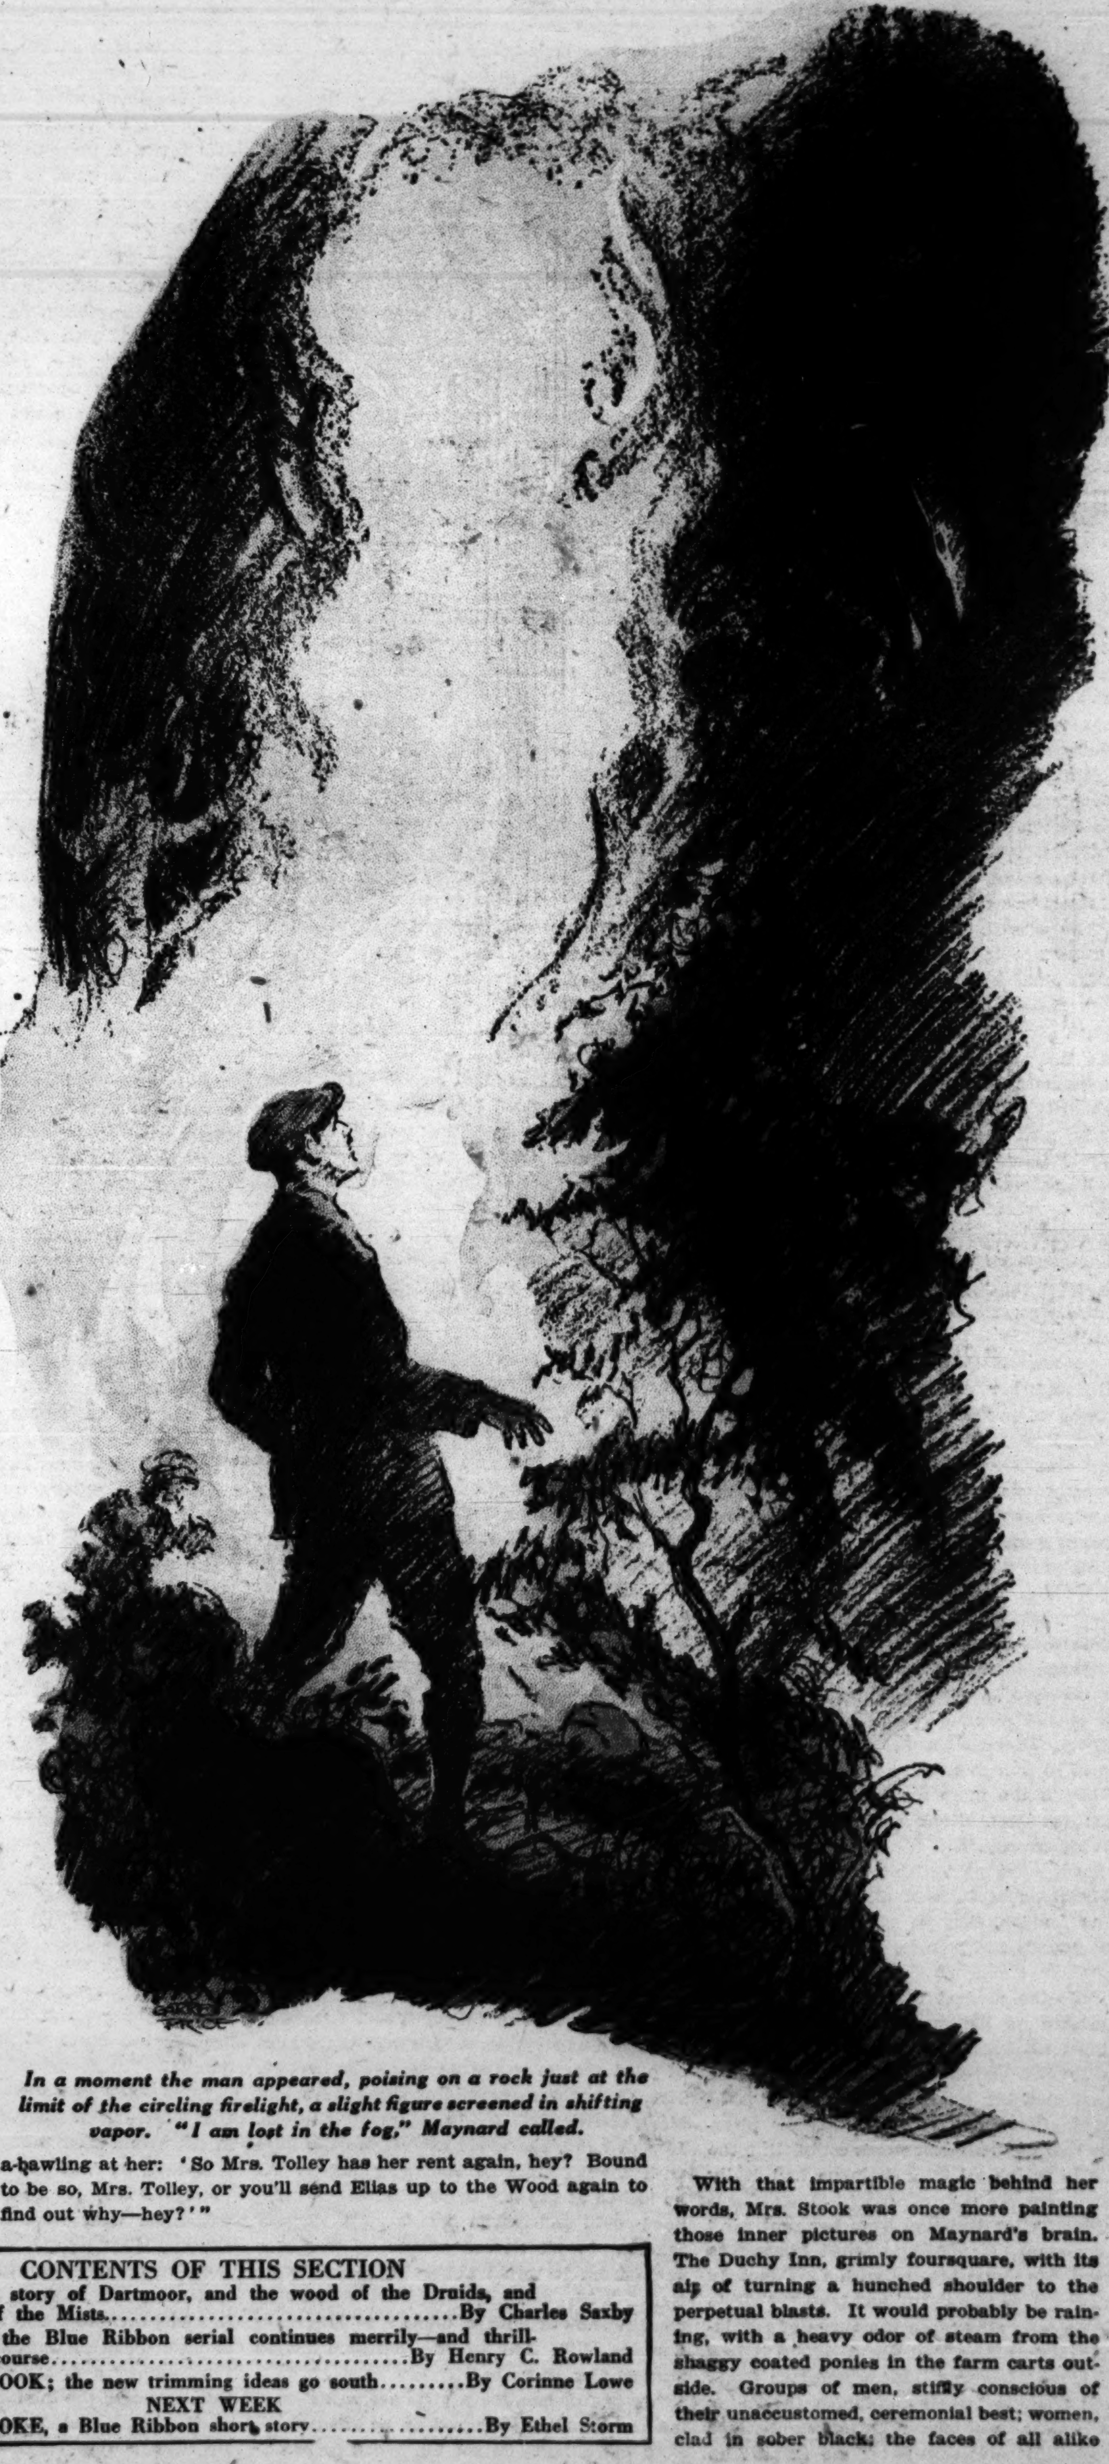
Mrs. Stook paused for a backward glance of caution over her shoulder, and her tone sank to a more thrilling contralto.

"There's others say as he got pixy led when a child. Not that I hold with such things myself, sir, but—I see to it as my own children is safe within doors after sunset, for the Moor is a whisht place come dark, come dew."

Her speech was at high tide now, and she rode triumphantly on its crest. Seeing it might spread itself over the lower levels of Dartmoor superstitions, Maynard sought to guide it back to those channels where it would turn the wheels of his own desire.

"You said that tomorrow is quarter day?"

"Tomorrow as ever is, sir. Come nine o'clock Mr. Bragdon will be up to the Duchy Inn, and it is five pound that Mrs. Tolley must pay un. A stinger it is to him each time she does it, for they's many as 'd give ten pound a year more for Hanger-Down if she lost her lease on it. How Mrs. Tolley does it is the wonder of the Moor, you might say, and I've heard Mr. Bragdon myself a-bawling at her: 'So Mrs. Tolley has her rent again, hey? Bound to be so, Mrs. Tolley, or you'll send Elias up to the Wood again to find out why—hey?'"



In a moment the man appeared, poising on a rock just at the limit of the circling firelight, a slight figure screened in shifting vapor. "I am lost in the fog," Maynard called.

With that impartible magic behind her words, Mrs. Stook was once more painting those inner pictures on Maynard's brain. The Duchy Inn, grimly foursquare, with its air of turning a hunched shoulder to the perpetual blasts. It would probably be raining, with a heavy odor of steam from the shaggy coated ponies in the farm carts outside. Groups of men, stiffly conscious of their unaccustomed, ceremonial best; women, clad in sober black; the faces of all alike

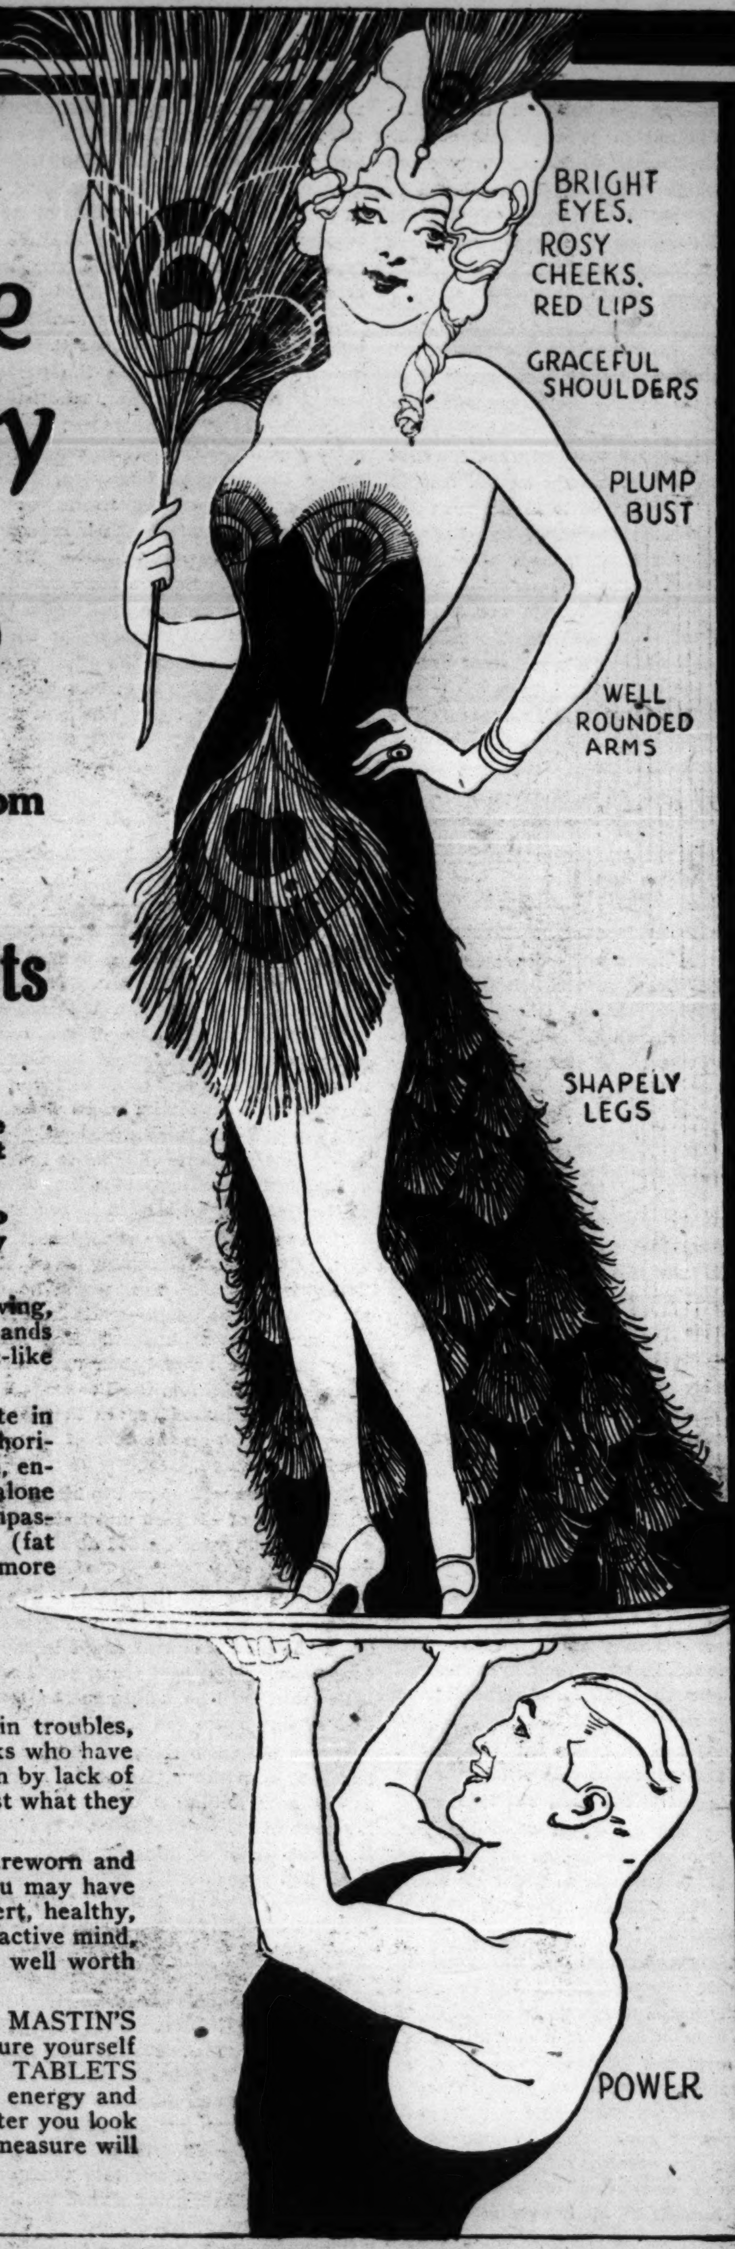
What is This Mysterious Force That Gives Beauty to Women and Power to Men?



Amazing and Magic-like Results from Those Precious Yeast and Raw Food Elements—the Vitamines—in

Mastin's Yeast Vitamon Tablets

Now Used by Millions as the Natural Easy Way to Health and Strength

Few women there are now who cannot marvelously increase the beauty of their appearance, improve their health and gain that fascinating charm of a well-rounded face and figure—

Few men there are now who cannot astonishingly add to their energy and vigor, clear the skin of eruptions and enjoy that splendid firm flesh "pep" of a well-built body—

Since Science wrested from Nature those mysterious, life-giving, health-building elements—the vitamines—thousands upon thousands can enthusiastically tell you of the amazing and almost magic-like results from their use.

Vitamines—"as mysterious as electric current, yet as definite in results"—are of three classes—all equally important. Eminent authorities declare that all three of the vitamines are necessary to health, energy, beauty and proper physical development. In ordinary yeast alone you could get one of the vitamines (water soluble B)—in raw, unpasteurized milk you could get another one of the vitamines (fat soluble A)—in certain fruits and vegetables you could get one more of the vitamines (water soluble C). But, with the discovery of a special process for successfully concentrating and combining all three of the vitamines as in MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS, millions of men and women everywhere have turned to this new, safe, certain and better way.

Sufferers from constipation, indigestion, lowered vitality, skin troubles, underdevelopment, weakened nerve force and lack of energy—folks who have been ailing for years, the victims of undernourishment brought on by lack of sufficient vitamines—find in MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS just what they had always hoped and longed for but never expected to find.

So, no matter what your age nor how scrawny, haggard, careworn and run-down you may be, no matter what tonics or preparations you may have tried in the past, or how hopeless you are of ever becoming alert, healthy, properly developed and physically fit—with strong nerves, a keen, active mind, a clear skin and generally improved appearance—you will find it well worth your while to make this simple test:

First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Next, take MASTIN'S VITAMON—two tablets with every meal. Then weigh and measure yourself again each week and continue taking MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS regularly until you are satisfied with your gain in weight, "pep," energy and improved appearance. It is not only a question of how much better you look and feel or what your friends say and think—the scales and tape measure will tell their own story.

MASTIN'S
VITAMON
THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE
YEAST VITAMINE TABLET

So remarkable are the benefits from these highly concentrated tablets that entire satisfaction is absolutely guaranteed or the small amount you pay for the trial will be promptly refunded. Be sure to remember the name—MASTIN'S VI-TA-MON—the original and genuine yeast-vitamine tablet. There is nothing else like it, so do not accept imitations or substitutes. The name MASTIN'S on the yellow and black package is your protection. You can get MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS at all good druggists.

if it isn't MASTIN'S it isn't VITAMON marked with that moorland seal of sheer endurance.

And within, at Cæsar's table, the agent himself, a portly fifty, florid, chronically choleric, plainly impressed that to be the administrator of a crown duchy was also a be appointee of the very gods.

"You said that tomorrow would be the test for Mrs. Tolley?" Maynard ventured, his mind still on his own peculiar angle of the affair.

"Aye, sir, so I said, and I says it again," Mrs. Stook nodded, with a certain darkling. "What with they pigs a-dying, if what he said be true, it's tomorrow as will prove it."

"Prove what?" asked Maynard.

At the directness of that question Mrs. Stook's speech dried up. A moment before it had been like the Dart itself in full spate, but now it was as though some subjectivo cavern had opened, swallowing it to depths where he could not pursue.

It was a phenomenon which he had already encountered in these Dartmoor people; one which he connected somehow with the land itself, spread out in a seemingly frank openness of earth and sky through which one tramped blithely, only to find oneself, with surprising suddenness, face to face with an impasse. And Mrs. Stook's change of manner was as impregnable as the Tors themselves.

"If you've finished with the meat, sir, I'll make bold to remove it. They's apple tart and clotted cream to follow."

Not until the deep tart was before him, with a bowl of cream so thick that the spoon stood upright in it, did she speak again. Then Maynard, under the push of the thought continually uppermost in his mind, sought to entice her back from her sanctuary of silence.

"I think I'll walk up to Wistman's Wood this evening," he remarked casually, but the glance that Mrs. Stook threw him held almost alarm.

"You be going up to the Wood, sir?"

"It must be wonderful up there by moonlight," he offered.

"I'd be keeping away from there after dark, all unused to the Moor as you be, sir."

"But there will be almost full moon," Maynard objected.

"It's the mist; once that comes up even the moormen theyselves go astray."

Maynard looked out at the evening, crystallinely golden in the mellowing light, every Tor sharp against a cloudless sky; but Mrs. Stook nodded again in superior sapiency.

"It comes all of a sudden like."

"If I get lost I'll shout for Elias Tolley to come after me," Maynard smiled. "The Wood is almost within hearing distance of the farm."

A shadow of suspicion crept over Mrs. Stook, and her answer came with some grimness of portent.

"Aye, if any should know this Wood, it's surely him."

Secretly charmed by the subtlety with which he was approaching his real objective, Maynard went on:

"I might stop and speak to Mrs. Tolley again—about the chair."

That was the word which had been lying unuttered in his mind all the time, waiting its chance to spring forth in some such elaborate carelessness, much as a lover will wait opportunity to utter the name of his mistress. Now that it was spoken it almost seemed to him to take on actual substance, as though the mere words were the thing itself; but Mrs. Stook accepted it with a faint superiority.

"She'll never part with the chair, sir. The Tolley chair be knowed all about, even so far as London, they do say. She's been offered pounds and pounds, but never will she sell."

"But—the present circumstances——"

Delicate as his suggestion had been it weighed too heavily on the balance between Mrs. Stook's speech and silence. Once again she effected her miracle of subjective withdrawal. She was even withdrawing physically this time, her last words completing the circle in which all their dialogue had really run.

"Mrs. Tolley'll always have her rent, sir."

Left alone, Maynard resigned himself to a mood. He seemed to see, with a melancholy clearness, how like to life had been the circle of their talk; always on the verge of revelations, then ending, just about where it had begun, with nothing accomplished or made plain. Though scarcely mentioned, the Tolley chair was the real core of that circumference of talk. He had desired it the instant he first saw it, startlingly splendid against the meager background of Hanger-Down Farm, almost thronelike, black with indubitable age, its carving and proportions a perfect specimen of domestic Elizabethan.

Wilfully he pictured it as dominating the too wide, too new, too empty spaces of that Benbrook Memorial Gallery, of which he was the curator. Enviously he saw himself bringing it back, in a sort of artistic banditry, as the crowning loot of this his first vacation tour. Swiftly he visualized the little ceremony of its unveiling, with himself, gracefully in the background, but still standing out a little. He had never yet been quite able to do that, and there was so much that depended on his standing out—ninety-nine per cent of it being Elsie Lathrop. Six years, and Elsie, in those prudent collegiate finances, seemed as far off as ever, and even her brave confidence, he suspected, sometimes wore a little thin. Small wonder, he thought, as he caught a sidewise glimpse of himself—past thirty, with the beginnings of the curator's stoop and the slightly peering manner of one perpetually involved in the half tones of a pseudo artistic circle.

That chair might mean so much to himself and Elsie. Deliciously he rehearsed again that possible presentation. Fall, the hazy Indian summer of the middle west, with the swish of feet amongst fallen leaves. The bare gallery, the president, faculty, and students of the college. Elsie, demurely radiant at his little triumph; and, prominently placed, the real center of it all and the target for all its hidden arrows, Mrs. Ira Benbrook herself.

Mrs. Ira—she loomed before him, a shape of vision only, but uncomfortably potent in his affairs. Stout, sixty, sentimental; the aggressive widow of a selfmade man whom, even before his death, she had left mentally far behind, as is the American custom. Tremendously impressed with the social prominence of art, she bowed before its authorities, while curiously alert lest, after all, it might prove to be "not quite the thing"; and yet, withal, she was of an uncomfortable shrewdness. Bustling, tyrannical, and always just-about-to-be fairy godmother of the gallery built by her husband's will, she lingered perpetually on the brink of further endowment, without quite going over. And it was on that endowment, with the increase of salary to follow, that Maynard and Elsie pinned their hopes.

But Mrs. Ira, stabilized by her shrewdness like a weathervane by its rod, was emphatically of the type that requires to be "shown," and that chair, undoubtedly a treasure, and as undoubtedly a bargain, might be the very thing to precipitate her into the abysses of generosity. "The Benbrook Chair"—swiftly Marynard planned a nationwide advertisement of it by articles in the leading art magazines, illustrated with photographs, including one of the gallery's benefactress. Knowing Mrs. Ira, he mentally halved whatever he might pay for it, making up the balance from his own slim pocket.

But between him and that solution of his difficulties, lay this mysterious and irritating certainty of the Tolley rent.

How curious and hidden were the connections of life. Hanger-Down Farm, the Wood, and the too spacious corridors of that Rockledge gallery, Mrs. Tolley, Mrs. Ira, and a tragedy of pigs. And always, in the center, himself, with Elsie Lathrop as his invisible companion and spur. One carried one's own world with one, wherever one went, viewing all others through its coloring prisms.

The long June twilight already lay over the Moor as Maynard started out. A golden radiance, faintly sad, as though gloriously mourning the dead sanctities of day. Under it the heather clad slopes showed copper-colored, shadowed with purple and overlaid by a bloom of early summer.

The moon already hung huge and yellow above the sweep of Hessary as he crossed under the trees of Dart Bridge and struck up the lane leading to the Wood. At Hanger-Down he stopped, looking over the hedges of piled granite to the meager fields beyond. Mrs. Tolley was there, standing severe and black shawled amidst the rows of potatoes. Hoe in hand, she faced him across the gate with a suggestion of one defending it. As he looked at the landscape about them Maynard could understand that; a place vaguely inimical to all human endeavor; whatever came from it would almost of necessity be tinged with calamity. Against it all the woman showed with a dignity of sheer endurance, like that of the beetling, storm scarred Tor above her.

"It is full late for a stranger to be leaving the road," she warned as he stopped.

"I had a fancy to see the Wood by moonlight."

"The Wood?"

Involuntarily Mrs. Tolley glanced to where it showed, a darker path on the high slopes, and as involuntarily she drew her shawl more closely about her.

"The Wood is a dangerous place after dark."

"I'll remember that," said Maynard easily; then he summoned his most persuasive smile. "I had another reason for coming this way; a hope that you might have changed your mind."

"If you mean the chair, it is not for sale," she answered.

"But surely—after——"

He hesitated; work worn though the woman was, there remained that about her which made the mention of pigs seem almost an affront; yet he could imagine her attending to them with a poise unimpaired. As it was, their ghosts seemed to rise behind her, implacable as the unseen pursuers of a Greek tragedy.

"After—your losses," he concluded.

That struck home, but she faced it. She would face anything, he thought; what else could she do, with that wide prison of the Moor all about her, cutting off escape, its desolation only accentuated by those desperate fields. He could see her, year after year, facing things across a narrowing circle of competence that, like the Magic Skin, relentlessly receded in upon her. Her face grew more rigid as he spoke, but her determination held.

"The chair is not for sale," she repeated; then followed a glow of pride. "I have heard that Americans do not understand such things, but the chair has been in the Tolley family for hundreds of years. It is all that is left to us now, and—since he is the last of us all—I must keep it for my son."

As she spoke Elias came down the lane towards them, his advent heralded by the thin pipe of a whistle, and even at that distance his flapping, half dancing walk proclaimed him as one set apart from usual humanity. A dim understanding dawned on Maynard; all that was left to the woman was her son, all that was left to her son, the chair. Had Elias been different she might have sold, but, he being as he was, her pride in him demanded that he have the chair as sign and seal of what his forbears had once been.

Silently he left her, regretting that in his way up the lane he must come face to face with Elias. Shamblingly the fellow came, child's face on man's shoulders, piping his way to that elfin whistle.

"Be you going up along?" he asked, as Maynard drew near. Then followed a half cunning of suggestion, "Maybe you'm agoing up to the Wood?"

The afterglow was fading, and over the Moor, already faintly silvered by the moon, crept a melancholy purple. Down the lane the figure of Mrs. Tolley stood out against the lingering lavenders of the sky, intently watchful of her son. Noting the look on Elias' face, Maynard had an odd feeling that back of the other's question lurked something which he could only vaguely apprehend by the term "a crisis," but a crisis of what, he could not imagine.

"'Tis a fine night for him," Elias went on, grinning again as though in delight of a mutual mystery. "The mist'll be acoming soon, and he likes the mist."

"Who likes the mist?" Maynard impatiently demanded, and Elias grinned again in coy reproach of so much reserve.

"As if you didn't know. For what else would you be agoing up to the gashly Wood come dark? It's the Giver, I mean, of course."

"The Giver?"

From down the lane came Mrs. Tolley's voice, calling her son in harsh entreaty, but Elias took no heed. Across his face, so unmarked by all that would have made it that of a man, there glowed a faint light as of one who, for an instant, sights something beyond the state of his ex-paradised humanity.

"Yes fay," he nodded eagerly. "The Giver, who else? If so be you sees him up in the Wood after dark, he'll give you what you asks of him. It was that away that Peter Gurney, down to Marycleave, got the wench for wife, come three year agone."

Some Moor legend, Maynard saw, one of those rather smothering mental creations which he had felt all about him. With a tourist's avidness for the picturesque, he listened as Elias went on.

"Caught up to the Wood, Peter was, by the night and the mist, and when he traipses past, come morn, I knowed he'd seen un. The wench was promised to another and the banns all called down to Shaugh Church, but she up and off to Plymouth with Peter that day and marries 'im afore the magistrate. Like cat and dog they be, now, and Peter doing his ten days in Tavistock jail for clouting her with a stick, but 'e got 'er."

With singular vividness Maynard could imagine that man of whom Elias spoke. Uncouth, pallid with the strangeness of his vigil, striding down that lane in the swirl of a vapory dawn, alive with renewed hope of a woman lost to him.

A suspicion prompted him to question, carefully disguising the amused tolerance back of it.

"And you, Elias, have you seen him, too?"

"How should I not?" Elias queried back, with utmost simplicity. "Six year agone it was, come St. John's Eve. Just so close as you he stood, with the mist ablowing all about un. 'And what would you have, if so be you could?' 'e asks me, laughing like. But I knowed un and I says, so bold as brass, 'That mother allus has her rent,' says I. And Squire Bragdon can take on all he likes, but her rent mother has, for what the Giver gives, you gets."

Once more Mrs. Tolley's call echoed up the lane, and at its command the light faded from Elias' face, leaving it only that of "an innocent." Then, as he turned to obey, came a last flicker that sent him after Maynard, who was already striding up the slope.

"You'll know if you sees un. Just like me, he looks."

He clouded for an instant in a doubt that ended in a weak flame of denial.

"That Peter Gurney told that the Giver looks like him; but it's false, I tell you. I've seen and I know; just like me, that's how it is he looks."

He shambled off, piping his way down to the solitary woman who awaited him, a darker shadow on her shadowy land. With a breath of relief, as of one bursting through entangling cobwebs, Maynard strode on alone.

A rough way, but gradually he neared the Wood, the first time he had seen it except by the light of full day. A few up ended acres of stunted oaks, unbelievably aged, their boles half buried in a slide of broken granite.

"Wistman's Wood," the Wood of the Wise Men; last remnant of the legendary forest which once covered all the Moor; sole receptacle of the secrets of those Druids whose overthrown cromlechs strew its wastes. Cautiously Maynard entered, picking his way over the granite slabs, the holes between them treacherously masked by bracken and brambles. A weird enough place even by high noon, it showed eerie and sinister in this play of moonlight and black shade. It looked such a wood as might be grown for the fashioning of Charon's bark or the dim galleys of some terrestrial Dis.

Gnarled trunks going deeply down amidst the boulders that lifted him almost to the level of the sparse branches, funerally wreathed in mistletoe.

It was that play of half light which was most disconcerting, that difficulty in determining which was substance and which mere glamor of moon. There were moments when the Wood seemed almost of a different dimension as apparently solid shapes dissolved at his approach, and what had promised open paths became high rock across his way. He had pushed to the center of it now, and in a half repulsion he turned to pick his way back to the more ordinary openness of the slopes.

The light was mellowing strangely; a huge boulder, which had not been there an instant before, wavered towards him, enveloping him in a moist darkness. Fluttering streamers wreathed the branches, a faery whiteness pervaded the whole place. The moon seemed to flicker and go out, like a blown lamp; a stone on which he had been about to step rent itself to rags, and he had scarce time to save himself from a plunge into one of the gaping oubliettes masked by the acrid ferns.

With a rueful laugh Maynard realized that these moor folk knew their own country. Even as Elias Tolley, or that Peter Gurney, he, too, was now "caught in the Wood by the mist and the night." It was an experience, and with delight he discovered himself still young enough for the thrill of an experience to outweigh its discomforts.

There was nothing to do but wait, even thought it be until the dawn. Amongst those piled up boulders the least misstep might mean a broken limb. A flat rock, overarched by a more leafy oak, promised refuge, and he broke off dry branches and built a fire. It blazed up, making of his nook an arched bower amidst the vapory chaos that poured all about it.

He sat long, warming himself, occasionally that he was going too fast to stop. He was acting on the impulse to reach Nancy and release her before the second pair hurrying up in the opposite direction could throw out a line of interference. And Matt realized that for the moment the extinguisher could not be brought into requisition without danger to Nancy, any more than a machine gun could be employed to disperse a squad escorting prisoners. He threw it aside and drove an eager fist at the jaw of one of Nancy's captors.

So far so good. This enthusiasm of attack on the part of one apparently unarmed man on four was not without a marked effect. To the bootleggers it may have smacked of madness, in which case they were right, for Matt was very mad. He dealt Nancy's other hanger-on the perfect mate of what the first had got, and Nancy, finding herself free to go, fell back a few paces to Matt's rear.

But by this time the other two had arrived on the scene, burly men of swarthy aspect and known to the Yankee fishing fraternity as "Geese." One of them was tugging at his belt, and Matt, judging the moment ripe to bring up his artillery, leaped to the spot where he had thrown down the extinguisher, whipped it up and directed his fire on the reinforcements.

But the immediate effect of this was disappointing, for, just as a machine gun has been known to jam at a critical moment, so now something went very wrong with the extinguisher. Sand, while an essential requisite for fighting men, is yet the natural enemy of guns of any sort, and Matt's weapon when flung down had landed on its muzzle, which had got plugged. So that now, instead of delivering its fire full-bore and with precision, there squirted out two thin, random jets nearly at right angles. One of these was lost in the swirls of circumambient mist, while the other by some curious freak of destiny sprayed Nancy, standing at a five yard interval to Matt's left.

For some brief moments immediately following a busy, if not a good time, was had by all who had come to the party. The guests from the schooner, who had as yet no knowledge of the character of the liquid refreshment Matt was so eager to serve, rushed him in mass formation, while Matt, suffering from the embarrassment of a hitch in his arrangements for their reception, was in no position to receive them. Like many another who depends on some patent safety device that through no fault of its inventor happens to fail of operation at the crucial moment, he continued the effort to apply it instead of doing the next best thing.

In the present crisis this would appear to have been Matt's serving himself of his weapon as might any soldier have done with a gun which was plugged and could no longer shoot, and to which the bayonet was not fixed. He might have used the extinguisher to fatal advantage as a club, swinging it by its drawn out handle. But before he could get around to this the enemy swarmed upon and over him. He struck out once or twice with his fists, then went to the sand as the nucleus of a sort of human push ball smelling strongly of garlic and salt fish, incompletely cured. The Portuguese fishermen gripped at any part of him which offered hand hold, as though grappling with and tieing up a bit of heavy, flapping canvas in a squall. They were sturdy sailor men and quickly made a job of it, and Matt, gurgling with rage, found his wrists and ankles lashed about, the focus of four pairs of eyes which stared at him with the satisfaction of a triumphant party of sailor hunters in quest of big game to be taken alive.

Matt was quite unhurt, except in his state of mind, this badly torn. He stared fiercely at his captors, then managed to get up on his feet. Looking about for Nancy, he saw her standing a few yards away, bathing her eyes with a handkerchief dipped in a puddle on a rock. She looked back at him with a furious face, then walked up to where he was standing.

"There, you idiot," she cried, half sobbingly. "Now you see what your silliness has got us into! You've nearly blinded me, and not so much as made one of these brutes sneeze!"

Not finding any appropriate defense of this charge, Matt glared at his swarthy captors. He was too enraged at his humiliation to speak immediately, and the violence of his futile struggling, coming at the finish of a 440 yard dash, had left him with the lack of breath. But now as he glanced from one to the other of them he was conscious of two distinct impressions, the first that their faces, though rough and determined, were not the faces one might expect to find on outlaws, but seemed those of honest, simple fisher folk of European breed, and the second that as their eyes met his they showed a curious embarrassment, as though apologetic for the rough handling to which they had felt obliged to subject him.

"Well, what's your game?" Matt panted. "What do you want to do now?"

There was a moment of hesitation. Then one, a short, deep chested man of past middle age and curly, grizzled hair, said with a somewhat doubtful assumption of authority:

"We wanta you, young fella. And we wanta da young lady you run away wit'." He stepped a pace closer and shook his finger in Matt's face. "You go to jail for feefty da years. And we getta one hunder' t'ousand dollars!"

It was with indefinable depression that Maynard sat down to the table, irritated that on this, his last day there, Dartmoor should turn a frowning face. The witcheries of the night had fled, and the Moor was grimly material under a smother of gray rain.

Yet there was a sense of stir upon the road outside as, one after another, the farm carts went by in the direction of Princestown. Stolidly padding they went, their drivers bent against the storm, and Maynard remembered that this was the day of rent paying to that overshadowing duchy.

Catching his glance, Mrs. Stook answered it with an almost uncanny intuition.

"Mrs. Tolley is late today, sir. But then, well she might be, poor soul, seeing that notorious rain and that she has to traipse it on her own two feet."

So they had been watching for Mrs. Tolley to pass on that road without. Probably the whole Moor was watching, in that hidden sense of the dramatic of which the young stranger had spoken. Maynard could visualize the throng about the inn, taciturn amongst their steaming ponies, speaking stolidly of other things while their eyes strained furtively down the road for a sight of that solitary woman.

"Aye, good and late, she is," Mrs. Stook nodded, not without a certain relish. "Most usual it's she as is the first, but today——"

Her pause had the effect of drama, too, reminding him of the things she was not saying; that, to the whole, watching moor, today was to be "the test" for Mrs. Tolley's mysterious rent.

And last night—against this dreary smother of the rain swept road, last night seemed irretrievably gone, almost to be ashamed of under the light of day. That spectral wood, with its mysteries of moon and ensorcelments of mist, was wiped out. Even though he walked to it he would find nothing but a few acres of rocks and dripping oaks, stark under the weeping skies. He had an uncomfortable conviction of having made an ass of himself in his conversation with that stranger. There were so many other things he might have said; his brain filled with them, scintillating sentences, all marked with the dismal sign of the unuttered and too late.

The confines of the room irked him; better the driving wet outside, if only to escape the inane stare of those purple china spaniels on the mantel. Except the road, all sense of direction was wiped out, the Tors all hidden in the gray wrack that permitted only a narrow circle of vision. Princestown, with its rent day throng, repelled him, so perforce he turned downhill towards the Vale of Dart.

Dart Bridge, its elm trees looming through the obscuring rain; beyond them, the lane to Hanger-Down. Why he turned into it Maynard could hardly say; it was certainly in no intention of renewing his attack upon the Tolley chair. That also seemed to be gone; like all the time he had spent here on the Moor, swallowed up by that swift pursuit of the past which devours each moment almost before one can grasp at it. It was more a certain inertia, the push of an idea that had become almost a habit, which propelled him to the door of the farm. Rain lashed, crouched against the lee of the down, the place looked more hopeless than ever, and he wondered that any could be found willing to wrest a living from those fields. That was the pride of these moorland people, he knew; that desperate clinging to the position of landholder, lacking which they must sink to the ignominy of service to others.

His rap on the door echoed back to him with almost ridiculousness; even if Mrs. Tolley were within, how would he explain his coming here again—when he could not explain it even to himself. The extraordinary circles of life and their unseen connections. Elsie Lathrop, the Benbrook Gallery, Mrs. Ira; and himself, seven thousand miles away, knocking on the door of this isolated Dartmoor cottage.

It was Elias who opened to him, the sterile childishness of his face underlaid by a glow of excitement, which faded at sight of Maynard.

"Eh, it's you. Us thought as 't was Squire Bragdon come down from Princestown." Then the glow mounted again in recovered confidence. "But he'll come, you'll see. In little while he'll be a-grummaging down so fast as un's mare can trot. Come you in."

It was the same room in which Maynard had first seen the Tolley chair, even as he saw it now, lording it over the threadbare neatness of its surroundings. The sight of it awoke again in him the desire to carry it off and enshrine it in some more worthy place. Then, as he looked at the woman, even the chair faded, for it was she who was the real presence. As she sat there, black clad, bleakly immobile, she was like some priestess at a temple which, its altars already flickering to extinction, waited mutely for the touch of the vandal. For her that touch had already come, he felt; she was merely as a mourner who waits the removal of the body. He could imagine her and Elias, with their meager baggage piled on a neighbor's cart, passing dispossessed out into the rain, the poignancy of their going slimed by the grin of that tragedy of pigs.

Yet he realized, too, something of what that young stranger had meant when he spoke of the moor people's sense of the art of a situation. The barrenness of it made this drama of the Tolleys a perfect thing, rooted in soil and tradition old as that ageless Moor and the centuries of the crown. He had been viewing it from his own angle of the chair, but he saw now that to these people of the waste the crux of it was that quarterly miracle of the Tolley rent, with its suggestion of something older even than the soil, more potent than the crown itself. A false touch would have marred the classic severity of its outlines; even death would have been too final, for the harrow of this was the going on.

It was Elias who saved the moment from becoming intolerable; gazing out through the rain drenched panes, he gave a cry of triumph.

"I told you so—it's him. I'd swear to Squire Bragdon's mare if 't was so dark as the Pit 'isself. Now us'll see."

The rattle of wheels down the lane, a splash of hoofs in its pools; the feeling of an overbearing personality about to descend on them, a grating voice with a sort of jovial snarl in it.

"Hah—so that's you, Elias, is it? What's all this—hey? Mrs. Tolley not got her rent—what?"

There was no change in the woman. Looking at her carven calm, Maynard dimly saw the high gods at whose altars she had so long been servitor. The grim lords of Poverty, Anxiety, and inexorable Decay, the only flame of appeasement left on their shrine being that unavailing witch fire of Elias' optimism. It was almost a relief when the agent bustled in, shedding his overcoat, the plump floridness of his face heightened by a varnish of rain.

"What's this, Mrs. Tolley?" he railed at her in a savage humor. "Your black magic hocus-pocus gone back on you—hey? Two hundred years ago and you'd have been burned as a witch. What d'ye mean by bringing me all this way? Why weren't you at Princestown?"

As he listened, Maynard half forgave, seeing that the man was secretly ill at ease, blustering against those superstitions which his position forbade him to recognize but none the less ingrained in him by a lifetime of the Moor. Looking at the three figures against the background of that room, he wondered again how he himself came to be there. Bragdon, like a high colored print of the conventional, fox hunting squire, bellowing himself to a conviction of his proper estate. Elias, with a pallor almost luminous in its expectancy, as though he looked for a shower of fairy gold from the cracked ceiling. Mrs. Tolley—as the woman rose, Maynard almost shrank from the desolation of her face.

"There is nothing in the lease that compels us to come to Princestown, Mr. Bragdon," she was saying. "It reads that the rent shall be paid each quarter day, upon demand. It has not been demanded of me yet."

"What's this, a female lawyer—a woman Daniel in judgment, what?" Bragdon bullied back. "Not demand—hey? Well, I demand it. Have you got it? Tell me that, woman."

"One moment," she said.

Maynard never forgot the coldness of the fingers that closed about his wrist, nor the sights and smells of the little hallway into which they drew him. The drive and lash of the rain outside, the chill drafts, the odor of boiling cabbage mingling with the pervading scent of drenched heather and peat.

"Mrs. Tolley——" he began, fumbling in his pockets, but she stayed him with a gesture, her speech coming with the grating clearness of a stream of bitter waters over a bed of stones.

"You spoke about the chair, Mr. Maynard. If you are still willing—and can make a small payment now—about five pounds——"

It was more than a pound of flesh those grim lords of her life were demanding of her. It was her very hope itself, not for herself, but for the one to whom her life was given. The last token of Elias' descent—in a confusion of tongues within him Maynard found himself wondering how much of this might be the outcome of Elias' babble of the evening before and that extraordinary interview in the wood.

There came to him an unavailing regret as he remembered his outburst of demand for possession of the chair. He could almost hear it now, breaking out into that fire reddened circle of mist with a certain irrevocableness. It came upon him with added dismay that, in all their conversation together, that young stranger had told him nothing that he had not already known.

"But I cannot pay you half of what the chair is worth," he heard himself saying to the woman, aware that it was his own pride of conscience which was now speaking. "Twenty pounds is my limit, and you could sell it for much more."

He had an extraordinary distaste at seeming to advantage himself by the necessities of this woman. He could see how, for him, in the years to come, the shadow of this hour would lie across the chair, even though it stood gloriously in the Benbrook Memorial. He felt that shadow falling, like a sort of slime, athwart the path to Elsie Lathrop, the path that, above all, he would tread with feet unstained. It was such a meager tragedy, after all, so unworthy of the forces he seemed to sense looming behind it. A chair, a thing of wood only, and yet to this woman it was the symbol of all that she had ever hoped.

"Meanwhile, as a loan—here's a bank note for ten pounds," he went rapidly on. "O, never mind the loan," he burst out in a recklessness of self-disgust. "For heaven's sake, take it."

It was almost hatred which looked at him out of the woman's eyes, the last flare of that half insane pride of the solitary which she was even then sacrificing to those universal implacabilities. It burned into Maynard's brain with a conviction that whatever she said would be so. There was an inescapability about it all. They would each give themselves what they wanted; she, her rent; he, the chair; and the differing manner of their giving almost proved that the gift was in each case really from themselves.

"Twenty pounds I will take for the chair. No other way—the Tolleys have not yet come to charity."

Not even her pride could disguise the clutching eagerness of her grasp upon that slip of crackling paper. Gaunt, white, she reeled, stayed only by her grasp upon the handle of the door behind her. Then she entered the room again, and through the closing panels came Bragdon's roar, its discomfiture tinctured by his half delight that the moorland legend had been once more upheld.

"Good God—she's done it. Mrs. Tolley has her rent."

Then Elias' voice, high pitched, bubbling with undefeated faith.

"Yes fay, I told you so. I asked un for it and what he gives you've got to get."

And Maynard, listening amidst the drafts and those whiffs of boiling cabbage, felt for an instant as though all his cool pride of knowledge were being shaken.

smoking one of the treasured cigarettes that must last him until morning. Hour after hour slid by; in the muffling mists the brawl of the Dart, far below, sunk to a faint diapason; from the nearest slope the sounds of some ponies grazing came with a sense of companionship. All else was a stillness so deep that he almost caught the subtly changing vibrations of the deepening night. There was a fascination about it all so strong that he doubted if it were "entirely healthy," and conscientiously he strove to "keep a grip on himself."

The sense of time was largely in abeyance, so Maynard could never quite determine how long it was before that young stranger happened on him, but the night had slid into its most silent hour. The first intimation was from those ponies out on the slope. A sudden ceasing of their breathy munching, an instant in which he could picture them with heads upreared, their nostrils distended to catch the scent of whatever it was that had disturbed them. Then a ring of hoofs on the boulders and a feeling of scattering flight. Their departure left an added hole in the night, an ache of increased silence, through which Maynard strained to catch a further sound. Even when it came he half doubted it. Footsteps, so deadened by the mist that they were more to be felt than apprehended by the ears, advancing down through the Wood, springing from boulder to boulder with a surprising sureness.

There was something almost uncanny in the direct certainty of that approach, and he felt himself chilling a little, then warming as he caught an unmistakable humanness in that presence. Whoever it might be it was somebody who knew his way and Maynard raised his voice.

"Hello, there."

He had not imagined that the man was so close. The answering hail, with a ring of slight amusement in it, came from but a few yards away. In a moment he appeared, poising on a rock just at the limit of the circle of firelight, a slight figure screened in shifting vapor.

"I am lost in the fog," Maynard called, his own tone catching a reflex of that amusement which had sounded in the other's.

"I saw your fire through the—we call it 'mist' up here, you know."

A young fellow, and from his voice and demeanor a gentleman. It was difficult to distinguish him as he stood there, on the extreme edge of visibility, but Maynard had an impression of a man several years his junior and of much his own outer and inner makeup. A fellow at home in cities, traveled, with probably an academic background; yet his passage through the Wood had argued a remarkable familiarity with the place. Even as he wondered Maynard's mind flashed a possible answer; probably this was one of the young men from that abode of weather beaten dignity known as Tor Royal.

"Then 'mist' it shall be, by all means," he laughed. "It seems to make little difference to you, though. You must know the place well to tramp it on such a night."

"I—O, yes, I know it."

The stranger shed the subject lightly and Maynard again took up his tone.

"That is lucky for me; I will claim your good offices for getting out of here."

"That should not be difficult," the other replied, then he paused, almost with an effect of giving Maynard a chance to change his mind. "That is, if you really want that."

"What did you imagine I wanted?" Maynard retorted. "To stay here all night?"

"One never knows. People want so many things."

In its tolerance, the slightly conscious broadmindedness of a young man still fresh from a university, it was just such an answer, Maynard amusedly thought, as he himself might have given ten years before.

"Perhaps you thought that I came up here to watch for the—the 'Giver' I believe, is his official title?" he ventured, and the answer came quickly.

"You know the legend, then?"

"I heard it an hour ago, from Elias Tolley."

"Ah, yes—poor Elias."

The reply came in a negligent half pity, then the stranger dropped into a more reflective mood.

"And yet, after all, you know, the Tolley rent is one of the miracles of the Moor."

"A quarterly miracle, depended upon to be on tap, like the blood of Januarius," Maynard put it.

"But which never loses its freshness."

"And tomorrow the supreme test," Maynard finished.

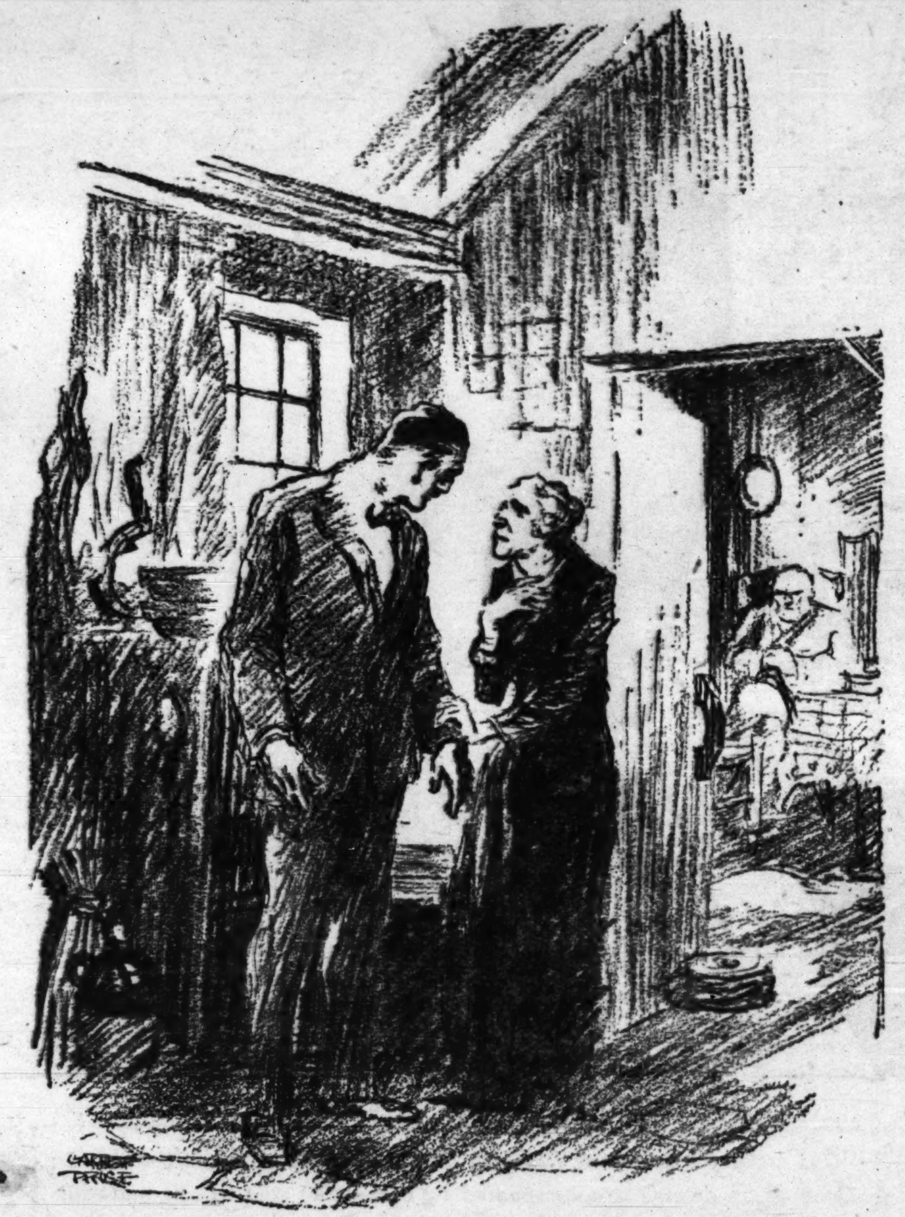
"For a stranger you seem well acquainted with the circumstances."

"I have a landlady," said Maynard, drily. "What I can't understand is that the neighbors don't help that miracle a little."

"You might wonder that—as a stranger. But, for all their inarticulateness, these moor folk have a keen sense of the drama of a situation."

More and more, as the other spoke, Maynard was receiving the impression of one of much his own walk of life. That they should meet here, at such a time and under such circumstances, was just another of the surprises of this surprising Moor. A place so famous, yet holding such reserves of the little known; so traveled by tourists from every part, and still remaining one of the solitary parts of the earth. One could never predict into what unusual circumstances it might not project one.

"When I heard you coming I half hoped that you might prove to be this mystic being yourself," Maynard went on, with a touch of humor.



Maynard never forgot the coldness of the fingers about his wrist, nor the sights and smells of the little hallway into which they drew him.

"I'm afraid I hardly measure up to the supernatural," the young man apologized.

"Hardly—since Elias Tolley impressed upon me that this 'Giver' looked exactly like him," Maynard laughed.

"And Peter Gurney claimed that he looked like him," the other smiled back; then, almost unwillingly, came the addition, "and, you know, he did get the girl he wanted."

"When the witnesses disagree—" shrugged Maynard. "It is a little disappointing, though. The presiding genius of a place like this should be a real Druid sort of chap, in magnificent nudity and a wreath of mistletoe."

"That would seem more appropriate."

Standing there on his rock, perpetually half hidden by the shifting veils of mist, the other seemed hardly more than a voice, at times. Afterwards Maynard thought that that was probably why he had never bidden the fellow approach the fire, but the idea simply never occurred to him. Then again, there was a charm about their half jesting, wholly unforseen colloquy which would have been spoiled by too much certainty.

"And yet it is strange that all who claim to have seen him should so agree on the same thing," the stranger continued, still lingering on the edge of the light, as if he, too, felt that same charm of elusiveness. "Just like themselves; they all agree on that, at least. It almost leads one to suspect that what they really saw was—just themselves."

"You mean——" Maynard asked.

"O, well—a place like this."

Up the slope the ponies were quiet again and the only sound between their sentences was that drip-drip of the moisture distilling in the alchemy of the oaks. An eerie place, and it struck again into Maynard's veins with a slight chill. In all this amorphousness himself and the rock on which he sat seemed the only solidities; even the other man might have been but a wraith.

"It certainly poultices one," he agreed, delighted once more that they should so comprehend each other.

"And after all, we know so little of what may lie within us to be poulticed out," the other went on. "All we know is that those two got what they claim to have asked."

"Asked of what?" demanded Maynard swiftly, and there was a silent interval, as if pondering, before the other replied.

"Who knows? As you said—it poultices one. Perhaps of an imagination of some principle of fulfillment that may lie within each of us. We think that we know so much, but in reality we do not even know how we fulfill our most ordinary desires."

"Our desires," the stranger went on, his voice coming somberly through a fresh access of vapor; "those thorny crowns of our youth; those pursuing hounds of that heaven which is said to lie within us all. And most of us seem content with lapdogs."

"We take what we can get," Maynard interjected, almost with a feeling of self-defense.

"Exactly," came the cool response. "But this legend of the Giver or the Fulfiller, one meets it in so many lands, told in so many tongues; but one never meets any mention of one who asked it for anything realy worth having. The stories always end in a tragedy of their own meagerness."

"They ask for what they want."

"For what they want! Elias Tolley, Peter Gurney; offered whatsoever they ask, even to freedom itself—and the one demands his mother's rent, the other a girl, for the beating of whom he was sent to jail last month."

There was a touch of scorn in the tones that came through the mist, as if the speaker were wearied of littleness. From off amongst the oaks the hoot of an owl followed it like an echo of derision. Maynard had an uncomfortable impression that that scorn, that echoing jeer from the place itself, were somehow directed at him.

"They asked for what they believed in," he argued, still vaguely on the defensive. "There are few surer tests of a man's faith than to offer him whatever he may ask. After all—how do we know that we would do any better ourselves?"

"Just for instance, now; what would you ask for if you met this mysterious stranger?" the other laughed, and Maynard, to his surprise, found the answer rushing to his lips.

"For the Tolley chair."

It had come out apparently without his own volition, and following it came a laugh, at his own expense, that startled him by its harshness.

"You see; we are all of little faith," he grated. "But then, that chair, to me, would be the gateway to so much, much more."

"Ah, yes—to so much, much more."

Maynard could not be sure if it were really the other who spoke, or if those words were just the echo of his own, thrown back to him by the increasing mist. Whichever it had been, there was withdrawal in them, and finality as well, as though this young stranger were completely through with him, almost already gone, in fact, without the formality of a physical departure.

He sprang to his feet with a shout.

"Here—wait for me—don't go and leave me here."

So strong has been the impression of crying to empty air that it was with relief that he heard the answer coming amusedly back.

"I'm still here; the mist hid me for a moment, that was all. If you wait a while longer it will clear and you can find your way back as easily as you came.

"But can't I go with you?" Maynard asked, loath to be left alone.

"Wait a little while and you will find it all right. I go a way that you could not follow. Good-by."

"Au revoir," Maynard called, and the laugh of farewell that rang back told him that the other was already on his way.

Those poultices of night and circumstance were playing strange tricks on Maynard. For a moment as he stood there, listening to those footsteps retreating in the same surprising sureness with which they had come, he had a sensation of being suddenly enormous. Enormous almost to infinitude, he seemed, and those irrevocably retreating footsteps might have been going down into unsuspected depths within himself.

But such things would not do, and he huddled over the fire, striving again for that "grip on himself" as he wondered what collegiate Rockledge would say if it knew the things that its official guardian of the arts was capable of feeling. As he warmed his cold hands there came a comforting sense of ordinariness, together with a touch of anger at this cool young denizen of the moor, who left a stranger in such a predicament.

A rather theatric young man, with his entrances, his exits, and his metaphysics. The most hopeful thing about him had been his prophecy of clearing weather.

Whoever he might be, the fellow was at least acquainted with the imports of those fickle skies. It was but a dew mist, after all; a blanket which the moor pulled over itself against the first chill of night. As earth and air equalized their temperature there came rents in that luminious opaqueness all about. Glimpses of more distant oaks, interminable aisles shot through with the mystery of the moon. Like down dropping veils the mist wreathed from the branches, sinking away into the holes between the rocks. Stamping out the remnants of his fire, Maynard started back on his unsafe way.

It was with relief that he at last left the heather, feeling his feet once more upon the narrow confines of the lane to Hanger-Down. A will-o'-the-wisp of a light bobbed at the gate, and as he came abreast of it he saw it was a lantern carried by Elias Tolley.

"I was awaiting for you to come back along," the boy babbled, looming above the yellow circle of light in grotesque eagerness. "Did you see un?"

"I met a gentleman," Maynard smiled.

"Just like me, he looks," Elias pursued.

And Maynard, with amused chagrin, realized that he, too, must answer on that single point of agreement of all those who had been benighted in the wood.

"It cannot have been the same one, then; the man I met looked pretty much like myself."

Maynard slept late the next morning; so late that in Mrs. Stook's demeanor as she brought his breakfast there lurked a certain adamant of censure.

"Perhaps you will parding it's not being quite so good as might be, sir," she said, with elaborate civility, "seeing how it's stood."

and it is a little above the average. But if you look closely you may observe that, whereas the imprint of my heel is fairly distinct, these others have gouged deeply into the sand. And there has been a scuffle of the toe. Now, what would that seem to indicate?"

"That these campers whose hospitality we are enjoying landed their stuff here and carried it up the bank," said Nancy.

"That is encouraging," said Matt, "but not convincing. Do you think that campers with imagination enough to leave a smallpox warning on the door of their cabin would land their heavy duffle here and jackass it a half a mile when it would have been just as easy to land it on the rocks fifty yards from the cabin?"

"Other jackasses have done it," Nancy answered. "Wasn't your blanket roll and sack of supplies pretty hard to carry in the dark last night?"

"Yes," Matt admitted, "but I had no intention of going to the cabin until some fairy whispered in my ear that I might find a kindly welcome waiting for me there. Besides there was only one of me, and there seems to be about half a dozen of these footprints in the sands of hard times. And they are all gouged pretty deep. Now let's try to follow this trail."

Although unwilling to admit it, Nancy was by this time roused to a keen excitement in the chase. Her eyes accomplished as much as Matt's in picking up the fainter traces of passage through the sedge and wild raspberry and eglantine bushes. They succeeded, or at least believed they had succeeded, in following these divers trails straight across what might be called the waist of the island, as its narrowest part, about a quarter of a mile in width, was nearly at its center. But the spirited chase was halted abruptly by the great boulders and slabs of loose, broken rock with the surf spouting over them.

"Where do we go from here, Sherlock?" Nancy asked, and not as unpleasantly as was her wont, for the exhilaration of what is by way of becoming a popular American outdoor sport of hooch hunting had put her in a better humor.

"The wild waves are saying it, sister," Matt answered. "Here again we have an interesting little problem in deduction. I am inclined to fear that we have fallen into a not infrequent error of young and inexperienced hounds, whether rum or fox. I think we've been baying on the back track."

"The back track from where?"

"From the freedom of the seas. I believe that booze was landed here on the ocean side in quiet weather and packed across to the cove."

"What would be the sense of that?" Nancy asked.

"Less chance of being spotted and arousing curiosity on the part of small boats ramming about between the island and the shore. In that case the schooner may have run out here not to hide her stuff but to get what was left, since the place ashore was to be abandoned."

"That sounds more reasonable," Nancy agreed. "Then let's go back to see if we can find where it was hidden."

So back they went and made a careful search of the rocks along the shore and gullies and thickets of blueberry and scrub line, but without result. Matt sat down upon a stone and lighted his pipe.

"We are no longer going about this thing logically," said he. "Instead of trying to puzzle out the trail and determine the clever cunning maneuvers of the quarry, we are merely guessing like children playing hide the penny and without the pianissimo or fortissimo to tell us whether we are hot or cold."

"It doesn't matter much," said Nancy, "because I think they merely carried it across the island and took it aboard the boat."

"Still if there is any yet hidden," said Matt, "I don't think that it would be ashore. The way to get a line on anything of this sort is to think what you would do yourself under the same circumstances."

"Well, what would you do?" Nancy demanded.

"Sink it on bottom a little way out, then lead a small line ashore and fasten it to a rock at low water mark," said Matt. "Then they could pick this up with a boat hook and haul the stuff up aboard their boat. If they buoyed it somebody else would get inquisitive and haul it up."

Nancy looked down at the water's edge. "It must be dead low tide now," said she.

"Lower than usual from the look of the weed," said Matt. "Let's take a snoop along the shore. You go east and I'll go west, and keep your eyes out for a lead of small tarred line fastened to a rock."

They set out on their separate quests not very hopefully, the indications being all that whatever contraband might have been stored in the place had been removed. But scarcely had Matt gone fifty yards when he heard Nancy hailing him in wild excitement, and he turned to see her backing up the beach and tugging with all her strength at such a length of tarred hemp as the lobster men use to buoy their pots or the fishermen their nets. Matt hurried to her aid with even greater exultation than a castaway might have on finding pirates' gold. For pirates' gold is not much good when all is said and done where there is no chance to spend it, but this does not hold true of hidden spirits.

When Matt arrived on the spot Nancy had fetched up at the end of her scope and seemed securely anchored to some very solid object out there at the bottom of the cold, green water. Matt took a turn about his waist, when both heaved with might and main. The rope was evidently new and tough and strong, but whatever was at the other end mocked their efforts to draw it any closer. Matt loosed himself and sat down with a groan.

"I've had some tantalizing experiences," said he, "but this takes the prize. Either the stuff's too heavy or jammed behind a ledge, or anchored with a killick. We can't do anything without a boat."

"Perhaps it's just as well," said Nancy. "Your habits are unknown to me."

"You needn't be afraid of them," said Matt, and stared wistfully at the line, as might a terrier at a rabbit hole between the rocks. "It now becomes a race between Murphy and the bootleggers."

"What good would it do you," said Nancy, "unless you want to turn bootlegger yourself?"

"That also is possible," said Matt. "I might play it against the income tax or trade if off for Sylvia—or something."

"Well, anyhow," said Nancy, "we know it's there, and in that case they are surer to come for it sooner or later. You are better at finding rum than you are girls. I must admit it was rather clever of you."

"Thanks for those first kind words," said Matt without enthusiasm. "I wish I'd told Murphy to come out tonight. It will not be left there long."

"O, bother the rum!" snapped Nancy.

"I'm afraid there's not much chance of that," Matt answered, sadly. "Here comes the rain again. I wonder if we can find a dry spot on this wet island where we can keep an eye on this cove. Let's look along the edge of the bank."

They kept on along the shore, picking their way over the big broken stones. The bank was about twenty feet in height, roughly sheer and rocky, and as Matt had hoped, they came presently to a spot where a great triangular mass of granite had fallen out to leave a sort of wide mouthed cabin where a dozen people might have found rough shelter from the rain. Being on the lee side of the island, it was also free of wind and with a floor of stone and sand.

"Not so bad for an outpost," said Matt. "With a book of verses and a loaf of bread and jug of wine and thou beside me scolding in the wilderness, one might worry through the day somehow."

"I don't see what you can possibly hope to gain," said Nancy. "What if they should come back here to pick up their contraband? They would do so with a small boat and probably not land at all. You can't capture a schooner and her crew with your silly squirt, though I'll admit you may be quite crazy enough to try."

"No," said Matt, "as I remarked last night, there are limits to the scope of even such a splendid engine of war on fire and firewater smugglers. But I have got my field glasses and I could at least identify the schooner with certainty, and maybe some of her people. In such a chase as this the prime neecssity is to know just what you happen to be chasing."

Nancy did not answer, though admitting to herself the truth of this. It had now begun to rain very hard again, so they sought shelter under the V-shaped roof of rock and seated themselves on a ledge. Even then the physical conditions were far from comfortable, and at the prospect of their passing many hours under such Matt heaved a sigh. Such outpost duty was nothing new for him and infinitely better than a great deal of the sort he had experienced, but there seemed no sense nor reason for subjecting Nancy to it.

"I say," Matt protested, presently, "why don't you go back to the cabin and keep warm and dry? There's no good in both of us roosting out here all day like two bedraggled chickens under a coop."

"I thought you would soon begin to grumble," said Nancy. "You have a way of jumping into a mess and then wriggling out of it again. Go back to the cabin yourself. I'm all right. Now that I'm here I mean to see the business through."

"Very well," sighed Matt, hopelessly; "then if you insist, I'll make a couple of trips to the cabin and bring our rugs and some reading matter and the makings of a little fire and some rations."

"So that if they should come they'll see the smoke or smell it," Nancy said.

"No fear," Matt answered. "There'll be time enough to chuck wet sand on it when we sight them. But if we can't be comfy we'll be as comfy as we can."

"Just as you like," said Nancy, indifferently. "But I really wouldn't be justified in leaving you here alone. If they should come, which isn't likely in such weather, there's no telling what silly idea might pop into your head." She turned her shoulder to him and stared out across the dreary waste of sullen sea and rain flung sky.

Matt rose wearily, slipped off his slung glasses and the extinguisher, and started back over the half mile of soaking moor for the cabin, reflecting as he strode along on the singular, almost phenomenal obstinate persistency which could induce a girl of Nancy's spicy nature to maroon herself on a bleak little island with a man whom she most evidently detested merely for fear lest she miss something. He decided that such a motive was not sufficient to explain it, and that she could not endure the prospect of his possibly acquiring the greater share of merit for achieving Sylvia's rescue. It must be jealousy, Matt thought, and then another reason suggested itself. Nancy had harped so much on his desire to win the big reward offered that some such object might be lurking in her own mind, now that there seemed an actual chance for the accomplishment of this.

Matt did not blame her greatly, if such were, indeed, the case. She was unquestionably a high if sharp spirited girl, and he thought it probable that for some time she had been pecuniarily dependent first on the efforts, then on the generosity of her sister May. If she could win her share of the promised reward it seemed to Matt that she was quite entitled to it. But her pride would insist that this be a just claim and the result of her own efforts and risk, and not a gratuitous concession on his own part. He did not question the ethics of her accepting a reward for helping to restore her best friend to her family. Mr. Gates could easily afford it and desired nothing more than that it should be quickly earned, and Nancy had no particular friendliness of sentiment for Mr. Freddie Griscom. Matt had heard her admit as much as this.

It struck Matt also as particularly unfortunate that a girl as attractive as was Nancy in a number of ways should be afflicted with so shrewish a disposition. She was far prettier than the average and, like her sister, possessed charms which should by right have been generous and sweet, but in the case of Nancy were bitter sweet. She was also, as Matt had proved, possessed of uncommon courage, and one to face undismayed crises of danger at which most girls would have recoiled. He had also discovered that where her affections were concerned, she had no lack of warm heartedness. Uncle Jerry had testified to her executive ability and efficient management of a household, for May, wholly occupied in the care of her husband, had detailed Nancy for the duties of housekeeper.

It seemed therefore a great pity that a young woman so fully endowed with desirable traits should permit them to be discredited by the indulgence of a quick temper and a sharp tongue and the persistent refusal to allow even the most polite tentatives of friendship and chivalry on the part of the young man with whom she happened to be associated under such peculiar circumstances. Then Matt began to wonder if, after all, he had shown himself as polite and chivalrous as he might have done. He reflected that he had not received her first remarks with the patience that no doubt he should have shown, and, turning this in his mind, was obliged to admit that he had been guilty of snapping back. Nancy might be a shrew, but there was record of shrews having been tamed, though not by such measures as Matt had employed, the mere indulgence in biting repartee.

As he plowed along through the rain he began to feel stricken with remorse. It would have been impossible for him to determine accurately his sentiment for her, but he was surprised to find a certain tenderness about it. She had been under a great deal of strain over the uncertainty of Sylvia's fate, and her nerves had been on edge, and now as Matt thought of her sitting there alone in the depressing gloom of that fissure in the rocks he became growingly conscious of a warmth and a sort of curious tenderness. He decided at any rate to make this last experience as little trying as could be managed and not permit himself to be tempted into any more cutting remarks. In which it may be seen that he was making some progress toward a higher manliness. After all, he reflected, it was precisely in such situations as were here that a man was given opportunity to show his better qualities.

With these laudable resolutions Matt reached the cabin, where he baled up their rugs with some food in an old oilskin which was hanging on the wall, drew a bucket of fresh water from the cistern, and thus laden made his way back to the cave. Nancy was sitting crouched in the same mood of silent contemplation as he had left her.

"A little fire will help things," said Matt, cheerfully. "I'll go back now and get the makings."

Nancy nodded, for she was beginning to feel the chill. Matt went back again to the cabin, where, not finding anything convenient in which to carry the wood, he contrived with some pieces of cord to make a pack. Then halfway back and laboring under his considerable load, it occurred to him that he had forgot to supply himself with the reading matter. So he laid down his burden and went back to fetch it. There were still some glowing coals on the hearth, and it struck Matt that it would be a delicate attention to take back to Nancy his thermos full of strong, hot tea. He set the water on to boil, and as usual, when one is in a hurry, the water took its time about it.

The operation finally accomplished, Matt set out again, the thermos in the pocket of his raincoat, and, coming to his stack of wood, he hoisted this upon his shoulders and made his way laboriously back to the cavern. And then as he started to mount a little slope from the top of which the cove would come in view he fetched up with a gasp.

For two masts poked up over the brow of the mound, and just as his eyes fell on them there reached Matt's ears a faint and tremulous scream.

He threw down his burden, flung off his raincoat for greater speed, and set off for the cavern at a pace which might have won a marathon. It flashed across his startled mind that here was history repeating itself, and that, just as Sylvia had intruded on the operations of the bootleggers and been carried off by them, so now was Nancy in danger of the same calamity. The boat must have put in just after he had left, when Nancy, rashly determined to score a beat, had attempted something of the sort that she had accused him of being fool enough to do, to hold parley with them and demand what they had done with Sylvia. Or perhaps they had landed to pick up the end of the line and, finding recent tracks in the sand and shingle, had traced them to the cave.

Matt made a record for the two or three hundred yards, leaped over the edge of the bank, fell over on the soft sand beneath, and as he scrambled up beheld a spectacle which roused all of the fighting instinct not far beneath his calm and whimsical exterior. A fishing dory was grounded on the beach of the cove. There was a man just getting out of it and another starting to run up the beach, evidently to the assistance of a pair of ruffians who were dragging Nancy in the direction of the boat, one holding her by either arm. And even at that distance of a hundred yards it was evident to Matt that they were having their hands full, for Nancy was a strong, athletic girl and she was fighting her best.

Matt had plumped down from above within a few paces of their shelter, and, although roused to frenzy at sight of what was going on, he did not lose his head. He rushed into the shallow cave, grabbed up his haversack containing the extinguisher from where he had laid it down, and snatching out the implement, continued his charge on the abductors. These had discovered him as he leaped from the top of the bank, and now, deciding that they could not hope to get Nancy to the boat before his arrival on the scene, or perhaps from other motives, the two in custody of Nancy stopped where they were, while their mates ran up to reinforce them.

Matt did not slacken his speed. In fact, a disinterested observer would have said

NEW TRIMMING IDEAS GO SOUTH

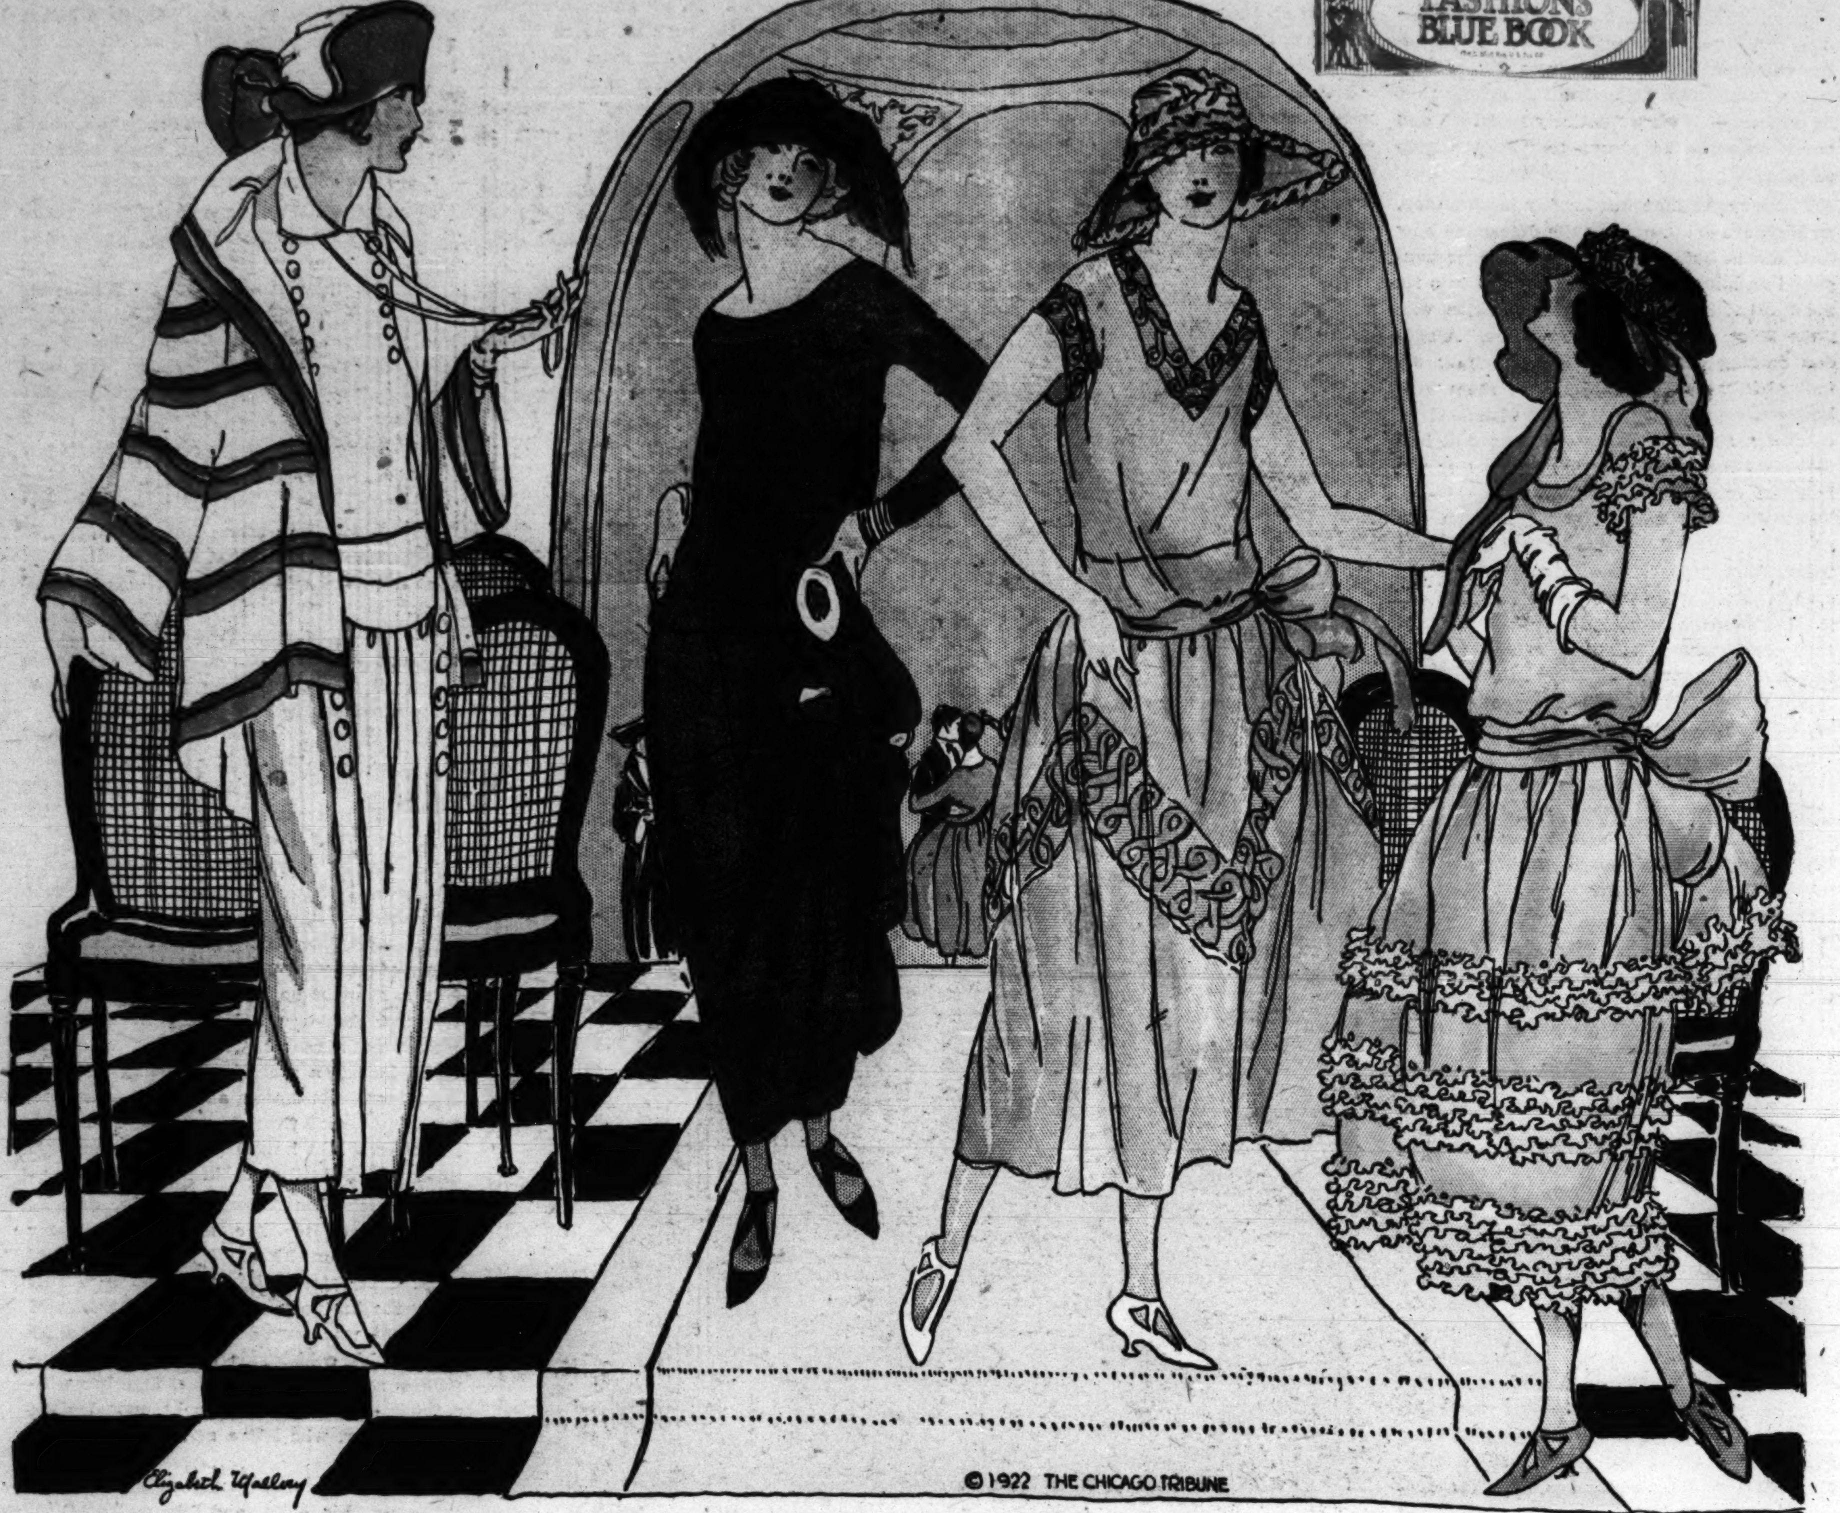
FASHION'S BLUE BOOK



Our ardor for matching is shown in the costume at the left, where a frock of white eponge is accompanied by a capelike coat of self material braided in blue, red and yellow and by a hat of white crepe, trimmed in blue crepe bound by red braid. An echo from one of Jenny's mid-season models is found next, in brown taffeta, with a large buckle of mother of pearl as the outstanding feature. A hat of brown satin trimmed with coque ministers to this afternoon dress. Next, a violet-blue organdy over pink organdy makes use of the fashionable lattice work, and engages a hat of rolled bands of gros de Londres faced with self colored leghorn. Another organdy frock is trimmed with white Valenciennes and worn with a hat of black faille wreathed in green dahlias and faced with yellow Milan.

This department appears every day in the Daily Tribune.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—It is our theory that everybody is entitled to one parody of "The Walrus and the Carpenter." I decided to draw out my allowance now on a Palm Beach conversation. For never was a time when Mr. Lewis Carroll's large order for a chat could be more appropriately filled.

The time has come, the Walrus said,
To talk of many things,
Of ships and shoes and sealing wax
And cabbages and king's (blue).

In the first place, there's sealing wax. I never thought we'd get around to wearing it so soon. But it has appeared on several bonnets designed for the south. For example, one Milan straw has a rosette of silk floss, the ends of which have been dipped in sealing wax of contrasting tint. This same rosette is repeated on the girdle. Another turban of crêpe triple has its two side choux—this word being French for cabbage, one claims right here to be covering another of the Carroll assignments—has its edges similarly treated.

This is only one of various fanciful elements encountered in clothes designed for southern wear. Another is a trimming of tiny seashells. Cute of us, isn't it, to be cast up on the Florida beach that way? And we do seem to have got around to it before Mr. Neptune. For on some of the most stunning voile frocks brought from Paris we find this trimming detail.

One of such models occurs in white voile with insets of indigo embroidery on sleeves and girdle. Entrenched among these are tiny conch shells colored the same material. This same shell treatment was shown, of course, early in the fall on some of the winter frocks, but the application is infinitely more charming on these summery creations.

Voile, by the way, is much to the fore among the lingerie models. Models of this fabric are made usually on long straight lines and offer extended waist boundaries. Their sleeves are any length, from a mere cap to a wide flowing one, and they incline toward the familiar bateau shaped neck line. Some of the most stunning models make use of bold Czecho-Slovakian embroidery, and for those who feel sure enough of themselves nothing could be smarter than a white voile dress with its wide sleeves decorated in an allover design of red, green, and yellow and its corsage echoing more faintly this pleasant inspiration.

For morning wear in the south every woman should have at least one frock of fine handkerchief linen. These were always well bred. Now they are popular. Many of them are made so simply that a drawing can give no idea of their charm, a charm which depends now, as always, upon exquisite hand stitches. Many of the new handkerchief linens are tucked. Indeed, this trimming touch appears on all manner of frocks for southern wear. Even some of the georgettes and other crêpes avail themselves of the fine pin tucking sponsored so enthusiastically by Rolande.

For a long time back only a baby could dress in pink and still be fashionable. This season that old grim creed has changed, and some of the most charming resort frocks come out in this long discredited color. Along with this is marshalled a number of other dessert-y colors—wonderful shades of green, yellow—most emphatically, yellow—and every tone of blue. (Here we make good on the last words of our parody.)

Here is one broad theory about resort wear to which every woman should give heed. A lady without capes is as silly as a continent without 'em. This applies to every kind of garment—homespun, knitted fabrics, serge, and most especially crêpes. If you want to be smart you accompany your frock with cape to match. And if you nourish some deep, rankling grievance against this garment, you make your coat look as much like one as possible.

At the left we show a white eponge frock—please remember incidentally that eponge is extremely chic this season—worn with a cape shaped coat of the same material banded in blue and red braid. The hat of white and blue crêpe de chine is piped with red braid. This same costume would be equally charming in serge, either white or navy. In fact, it suggests an infinite number of possibilities.

In many years of fashion service I have suffered prostration of my taffeta adjectives. So I shall content myself with the remark that the frock of this material is being widely utilized for both afternoon and evening models. Second from the left is a brown taffeta adapted from one of Jenny's mid-season models. This is interesting because of the three draped flounces held in the center of a triangular draped piece of self material by a mother of pearl buckle. Mother of pearl is one of those mothers just about as attractive as daughter herself, and Jenny has made use of it as buttons, buckles, and, indeed, makes whole girdles of it. Over here we are following her example, and even some of the resort millinery chooses this substance for trimming.

Lattice work! By spring we shall all be latticed as an Elizabethan window. It is much used on mid-season serges and gabardines, and on the organdy dresses for southern wear it is a favored thought. Second from the right a frock of violet blue organdy over a slip of pink organdy makes use of a first cousin of this treatment effectively. The hat of matching gros de Londres is faced with self-colored leghorn.

One of the most fashionable of millinery combinations—that of faille and straw—is located at the right in a black faille hat wreathed with green dahlias and faced with bright yellow Milan straw. With this a frock of green organdy is trimmed with Valenciennes extending to the sash.

SYNOPSIS.

Matthew Holmes' speed boat is wrecked while he is on his way to interest his uncle, Jeremy Taylor, in a new fire extinguisher. Landing at the old Putney place, he is greeted by three ferocious dogs and a mysterious foreigner. He turns the extinguisher upon all four and is taken away in a car piloted by one Bill Emerson. Bill reveals that Sylvia, heiress of Hiram Gates, the millionaire, and fiancée of Freddie Griscom, has disappeared while canoeing. Much to his surprise Matt is greeted warmly by Uncle Jerry, who has risen from his supposed deathbed to marry May Upton, his pretty nurse. Matt has been in disfavor with both, but now Uncle Jerry regards him as a rescuer, as beautiful Nancy, his wife's sister, is "running the place." Nancy and Matt promptly clash in a battle of wits. Nancy asserts Sylvia either has been drowned or has eloped with Sam Sprague, the shipbuilder. Matt declares she has been kidnaped for ransom, having in mind the foreigners at the Putney place. Nancy whisks him over to the Gates place, where they find a reward of $100,060 has been offered for Sylvia's return. Accompanied by the fire extinguisher and Nancy, Matt visits the Putney place and sees a launch glide out. "Sylvia is being taken away," he thinks. But the launch takes no passenger. Soon it returns and three men load its cargo of wooden cases into two limousines. "Whisky runners," cry Matt and Nancy, disgustedly, and go home. Nancy advances the theory the bootleggers may be holding Sylvia captive, and the two trail a suspected "bootleggers' ship" to a nearby island, then turn back, much to Nancy's disgust. Next day they raid the Putney place, but too late. The foreigners have fled. Matt goes to the island to trap the bootleggers. Tiring of his vigil and the driving rain, he hunts up a cabin, but as he nears it he sees a light. The bootleggers and Sylvia, he thinks. Unlimbering the trusty extinguisher, he creeps to a window and peers inside the cabin. There he sees Nancy, who has refused to be left behind. The complete fitting up of the cabin mystifies both.

SEVENTH INSTALLMENT.

"Kidnapers!"

"I PASS," said Matt. "It looks to me as though somebody, a couple of college boys perhaps, had planned to camp out here and then for some reason had cleared out. Maybe they've gone to get somebody and are coming back. In that case, let's hope that we don't know them."

Nancy looked much disturbed, while Matt made no effort to suppress his grin.

"That's what you get for holding the conventions in scorn," said he. "But cheer up; I don't think they'd be apt to put off in this bad weather, and Murphy may get here first."

Nancy did not answer. Like Matt, her act had been the result of sudden impulse, and here already was a contingency on which she had not counted. To cheer her further Matt pointed out that if the northeast wind were to bring down a good old New England storm it might be nearly a week before even Murphy would venture the passage to the island, as the sea would be rolling in with violence. "Never mind, though," he concluded cheerfully, "we can pretend that we are castaways, and if there is any truth in the movies such situations break pleasantly in the end."

This remark did not serve greatly to improve Nancy's spirits nor her demonstration of them. They quickly finished their breakfast, when Matt, with the neatness of a veteran soldier or camper, cleaned up the dishes, though not entirely to the approval of his more dainty companion in exile. Then they slipped on their raincoats and Matt slung a haversack across one shoulder and his binoculars over the other.

"Why the sack?" Nancy asked.

Matt answered this question by slipping the extinguisher into it. They stepped out into the swirling gusts of drizzle, Matt turning to close the door behind him.

"Holy mackerel," he gasped.

Nancy swung about to see his eyes fixed with horror upon an end of twelve inch spruce plank which had been tacked upon the door. This bore a rude inscription which looked as if it might have been made by a finger dipped in a mixture of grease and lampblack, and read:

SMALL-POX.
KEEP OUT.

For a moment Matt stared at this forbidding legend. Then he laughed. Nancy gave him a startled, frightened look.

"You've got a curious sense of humor," said she.

"Bunk!" said Matt. "The boys wrote this sign to scare off any possible visitors, or maybe it was the bootleggers.

"All the same, it might be true," said Nancy.

"Well, in that case, the worst is yet to come," said Matt. "The next time we go camping together, we'll take a little vaccine virus. But it's a bit late now."

"It's all right for you to talk," said Nancy. "You were vaccinated for the war, but I haven't been since I was a little girl."

"O, come," said Matt, "it's just a bluff. If we leave before anybody comes I'll write underneath, 'Leprosy and bubonic plague. Not fumigated.' You're a lot more apt to catch pneumonia—or something else."

"Such as——?"

"Well, acute lead poisoning if we should happen to run into the bootleggers, or at least I might. Pirates usually save out the women." He reached for the collar of her coat and buttoned it under her pretty chin. "They've got a pleasant day for it."

The rough desert island presented about as dreary an aspect as one can imagine. The wind was not strong, but there was a harsh salty sting to it, and the drizzle not thick enough to prevent a considerably extended view of the desolate surroundings, no great advantage so far as any cheer was concerned. From the ocean side came the steady growl of breakers, while under the island's lee, along the edge of which they were making their way, the water was still except for a ground swell which swung around the ends of the island in long undulations.

"No place out here for amateur sailors," said Matt, "and for that reason our rum running friends may see fit to profit by it. I doubt they make long runs with their stuff or carry a great deal at a time. The business is getting to be fairly systematized, and the chances are they get their supply from passing ships well off the three mile limit and running perhaps from the West Indies or down the coast from Canadian ports."

Picking their way along the shore, they came presently to the little cove where Matt had disembarked the night before, and here almost immediately they struck a warm scent. For above high water mark the loose shingle and sand showed unmistakable traces of having been disturbed. In former years Matt's favorite recreation had been hunting, not alone with a single guide in the solitudes, but with jolly parties in the Florida piney woods, and he had acquired some skill from cracker trackers in the distinguishing of traces left in just such a registering medium.

So now his sudden excitement aroused first Nancy's contempt for what she was pleased to consider his romancer's failing for being carried up in the air and dangled from the heights by a slender thread.

"Anybody might have made those tracks," said she, "the campers, or people landing here to look for Sylvia. If you were to see a big, round, white stone you would immediately let out a whoop and say you'd found a roc's egg."

"Well," said Matt, "it might be a petrified one at that. All of us great thinkers build up our hypotheses from apparently insignificant but to the logical mind incontrovertible facts which form the nucleus on which to base our skilled deduction. Agassiz reconstructed the whole fish from a single scale, and Newton the law of gravitation from an apple bouncing on his bean. Now listen and learn wisdom such as they fail to teach you at college. You see those tracks," and he pointed to a mixture of sand and gravel.

"Quite so," mimicked Nancy.

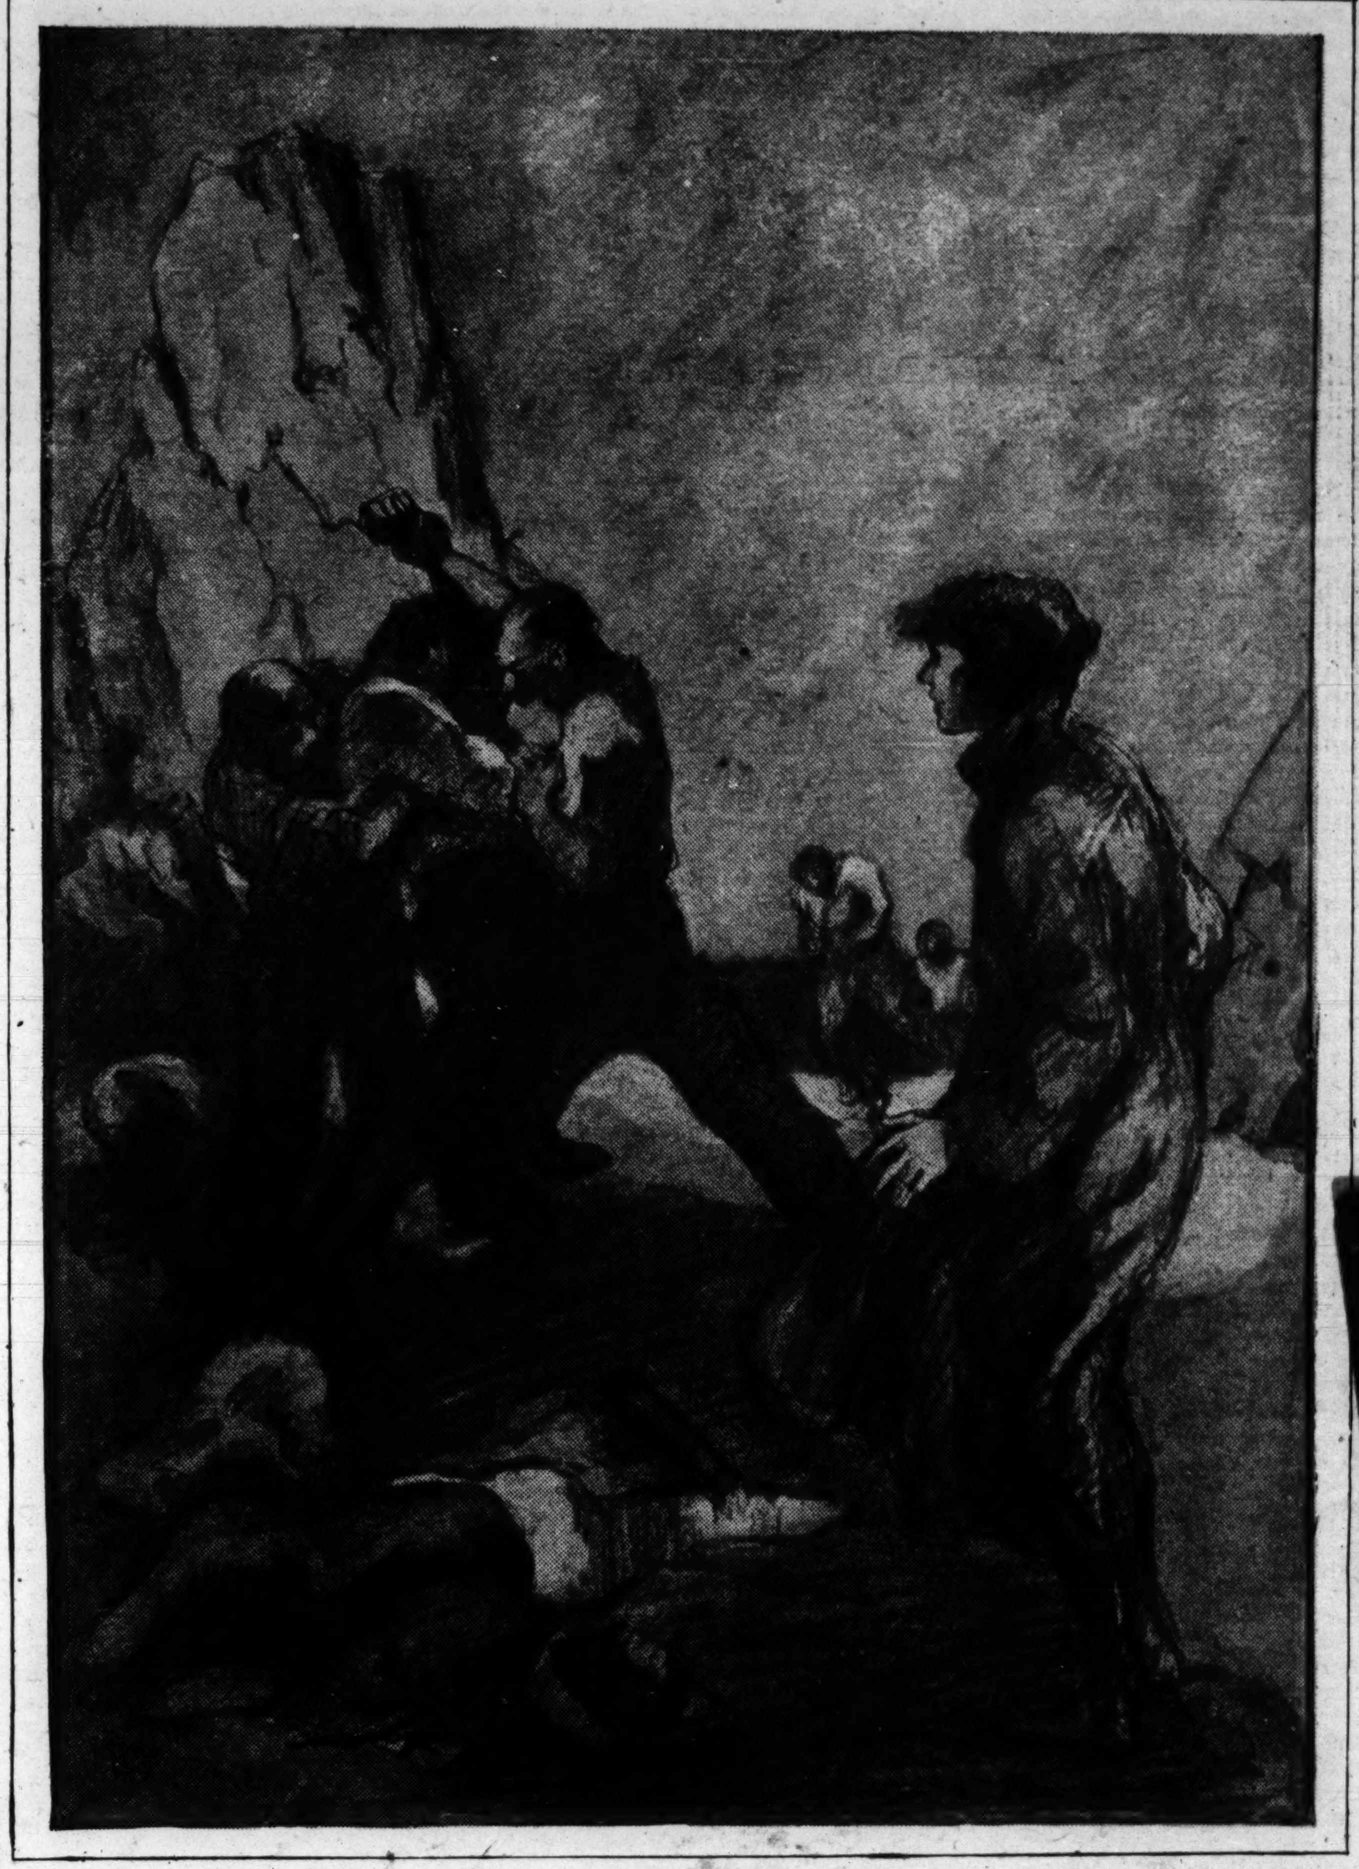
"Well, now, I'll walk beside them." He did so. "Do your bright eyes detect any marked difference between my tracks and these others?" he asked.

"Yes," said Nancy. "Yours seem to toe in a little, but then I had already got the clew to that on seeing you in snug boots and breeches."

"Good," said Matt. "Legs slightly bowed are usually the strongest. Principle of the Gothic arch. What else do you observe?"

"A lighter tread," said Nancy, "as though from the habit of pussyfooting, and from which one would argue a stealthy character."

"Possibly," Matt admitted, "but even in that case one hundred and seventy-five pounds is bound to make its due impression,



Matt dealt Nancy's other assailant the perfect mate of what the first had got, and Nancy, finding herself free to go, fell back a few paces to Matt's rear By this time two others had arrived on the scene.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

THE SMART TEA GOWN.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—Popular superstition, I think, has it that the Englishwoman originated the tea gown. If this is true, at least the Frenchwoman has had a hand in exploiting it. Women of this country entertain in tea gowns at those little dinners "tres intime," which you would think never occurred off the stage. Of course, this being the case, the house dresses are elaborate beyond dreams.

Capt. Molyneux, designer of costumes for women, who, as you may know, used to be with Lucile and is now well established by himself under the backing of rich and distinguished English capitalists, has recently married a Canadian girl, I believe.

The first sketch represents the gown in which she appeared as hostess at a dinner party in her new home.

It is a charming tea gown of palest crepe de chine, wrapped round the figure closely in the skirt and full in the blouse. And even a smart tea gown, you can see from this creation, shares the tendency of the day to blouse. It fastens with a bow tied simply on the side. We have remarked before in this column on these single fastenings even for gowns that are more formal than a robe d'interior.

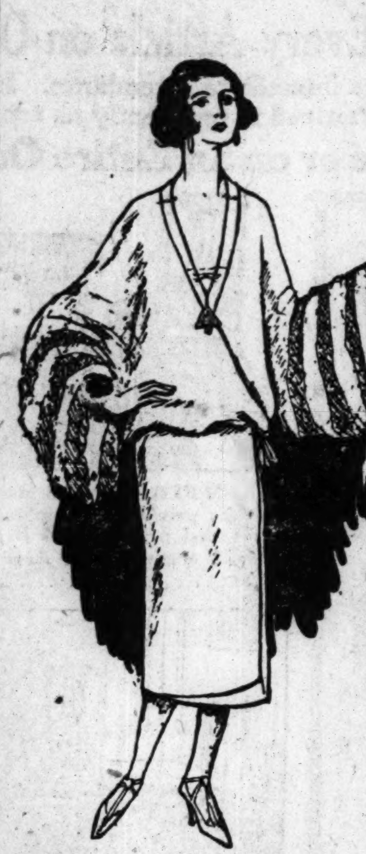
The sleeves suffer from the peculiar complaint which attacked them, and them alone, and for which Jenny is responsible. They are enlarged and long, striped round the lower arm with fragile silver lace. But I think there is a secret to tell as to the future of the sleeve. If signs and omens count for anything, they will be moderate in size, with a flare between elbow and wrist and gathered into a cuff. The armholes stand a show to be a little less exaggerated than for the last year.

Among eccentricities of the day is the gown with only one sleeve. The second sketch shows a black crepe de chine gown worn recently by Princess Papurthala at a ball. One long chiffon sleeve falls almost to the hem of the dress; the left arm is bare.

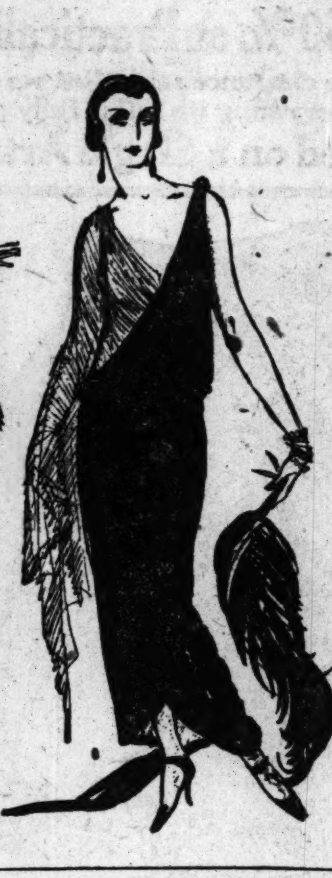
The third dress is what we used to call "corking," isn't it? Certainly, as a snapshot of the styles of the moment, it is brilliantly representative. But I don't know that I should go out of my way to get a dress now that descended into points. All things must have an end that are on this planet, even that handkerchief effect made famous by Vionnet. At a smart house the other day the premiere was showing something she wanted to make for me for spring, but from a winter's stock model.

"It is perfect," she said, "only I'd omit the points if I made it now, and have it even round the hem."

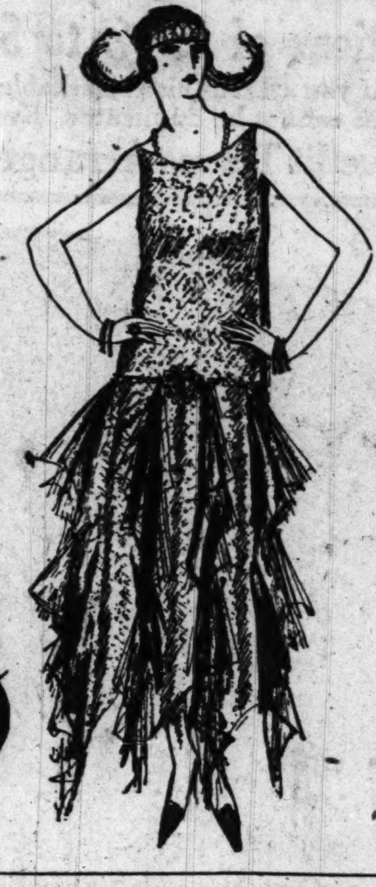
As always, put what valuation you will on the little straw showing which way the fashion of the women listeth, but if you have a dress with pointed drapes on it you are for the moment far from out of style.



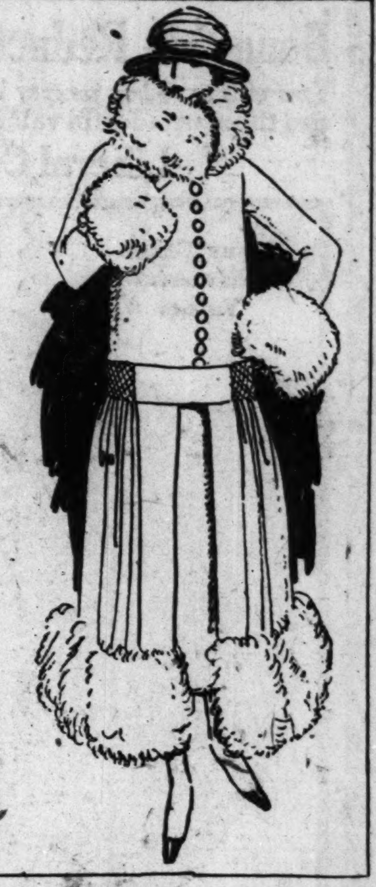
Form of grown affected by French hostesses for dinner parties "in the home."



Ball gown showing eccentricity of just one sleeve.



Snapshot of present styles; filet of silver and black tulle.



Coat of white jeersey trimmed in white mouflon, foreshadowing spring silhouette.

As for this model, it is almost insolently French. It appeared at the Bal des Lumieres the other night, a network of filet of silver and black threads, with rhinestones studding it everywhere, and belted with a ceinture of pearls. But for all that, the dress would have been as nothing without its points, which were in black tulle that delicately reinforced the silver and black filet, and they hung audaciously almost to the floor, while the upper peak of the slit mounted almost to the knees.

The headdress accompanying is awfully smart. It is the low Greek bandeau, with a wide spread of aigrettes on either side.

I am still a little troubled about advising against points, for even silk jersey and fringe are still fashionable, although all experts have been engaged in predicting their demise for many a day. Mr. Molyneux the other day told me he was buying up all the silk jersey he could lay hands on. Yet three seasons ago an American woman over here declined to get a dress that was more becoming to her than any other in all Paris, because it was of silk jersey, and that was going to be passe. This is my idea of the way not to buy your clothes. Get what is becoming, and let the future take care of itself. If a smart house shows you something, you would not look queer in it for many a long day.

Again a winter coat—but why not winter coats in the winter, if they carry a note of spring? This one, I think, like another of a week just past, holds the suggestion for the silhouette for spring. This is a white jersey skating costume which Mr. Molyneux has made for his wife to dazzle in at St. Moritz. The fullness hanging over that long pillowslip of a silhouette is what I think tells the story of a day to come. The fullness of the skirt is drawn into smoking on the hips, under which a low belt passes, showing front and back. The coat is trimmed at collar, cuffs, and border in white mouflon, and it fastens straight up the front. This same model is being reproduced for the streets of Paris in beige cloth, trimmed with beaver.

It is awfully amusing to see white appearing in Paris. I saw a short coat today in white smooth fur, made like the prevailing tailored jacket, with a bloused back and a low, narrow girdle, below which the jacket extended for some six inches. This white fur was edged with black monkey, and the jacket was worn with a black dress and hat. No costume is quite complete now without some touch of white, or some color. Raw tomato reds and raw blues are distinguished.

Is Marriage a Failure?

Why do so many marriages go wrong? What are the underlying causes of happy marriages? Are there any happy marriages? What is the matter, if anything, with marriage, the institution?

W. L. George, the English novelist, investigated 150 marriages. One hundred and sixteen cases he eliminated as unsuccessful; in five cases the husband was unfaithful; in ten it was the wife; the husband disliked the wife in three cases and in seven it was the wife who did the disliking. Only nine marriages, Mr. George says, were "apparently successful." "Marriage," he adds, "is on its trial before a hesitating jury."

Look over the marriages you know yourself. How many are successes; how many are failures? And why?

The Tribune will pay $1 for each letter published on the question: Marriage—what do you think of it? Address Marriage Editor, The Sunday Tribune.

His Only Fault.

I have been married eight years to a man who is a perfect gentleman, a good provider, a wonderful father; loyal, considerate, and kind; says he loves me. And yet I considered seriously for some time of leaving him!

He doesn't give me one cent unless I ask for it. The humiliation becomes more galling every time I have to subject myself to it, because I used to earn my own money, and I don't think it's fair for a man to be so stubborn.

I try in every way to be a good wife and mother, but nothing seems to make any difference. Every year I feel more bitter about it. One day when I was feeling blue I simply wouldn't ask for car fare, but walked miles to do a necessary errand.

I really love my husband—aside from that—and have told him how I feel about it and asked for an allowance as small as $5 a month—and he refuses it. He says it's all mine if I ask for it. And sometimes I reach the mood where I would starve before I'd ask for a nickel. With a man sane in every other way, I have to stand it or leave him. With conditions like this in many homes can one wonder why marriage is a failure? B. U.

When Troubles Begin.

"Needles and pins! When a man marries—" There we have the old truth, tersely put, and handed down through the ages. And this rhyme is only another way of saying that the marriage problem, so far as it concerns a man, lies in the adaptation of his habits to feminine habits and accessories. This accomplished, he settles down and lives happily ever after.

I believe in marriage. It is the biggest getting away from petty things I know of. No other love so enriches a woman's life as her husband's love, because husband love combines the devotion of a man for his sweetheart with all the other loves of his life, and pours them in a powerful flood of passion at the feet of his wife. This is at once the glory and strength of a man's love, for it unites all his affection and admiration, and places them in the keeping of one woman. And she, if she would keep their comradeship at its finest and best, must open her hands to all the elements that make his life worth while.

Our American girls are adaptable. They have proved it hundreds of times—in the business world, in European circles, in college sets, in war service. How quickly they respond to the demands made upon their natures! Teach them the ideals and principles and demands of marriage. Prepare them for it as they are prepared for any other place in the business or social world, where in order to succeed, they must reach out and give, sincerely, earnestly. And, as far as America is concerned, the institution, marriage, cannot be a failure. P. C.

Don't Expect Perfection.

Twenty-one years of married life—and I still say it is a success. If I had it all to do again I am positive I would do exactly the same thing. Marriage is the foundation of our present day society. As long as human beings are as they are marriage, successful or unsuccessful, must continue.

Is there anything anywhere in this material world that is absolutely perfect? Marriage is no exception to the rule. Man is far removed from perfection—woman not quite so far. Then how could two imperfections make perfection? I do not maintain marriage is a state of perfection, but a successful institution. Am I not right?

From my own experience I have learned many useful lessons. Selfishness must be eliminated. I have lived and observed and among my observations I have seen many, many selfish wives. Wives who seem to expect all and give nothing in return. Yet even some of these are successful marriages, for the good natured animal does not seem to realize his condition, so "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

Financial matters probably cause more discord and disagreement than any other trouble. Many a romance has gone to pieces on this particular rock. Why should a man be expected to account for every penny? Why should a wife be expected to account for every penny? Why should a wife be expected to stretch every dollar and make it do double duty? Know your income and then live within it.

Men are just big boys and so easily managed if one would only give them a little consideration and thought. Love may not endure to the end of the chapter, but in the majority of cases I believe it does and I can say with the poet, "Grow old along with me—the best is yet to be." M. S.

Spirit of the Age.

Why do so many marriages go wrong? Because the contracting parties go into it blindly and carelessly. They have little conception of its sacred obligations.

Recklessness is the spirit of the age. Young people have too little reverence for sacred institutions and too much of the scrap of paper attitude toward contracts. "Till death us do part" is lightly spoken and soon forgotten.

There are happy marriages, plenty of them, but they are found where husband and wife recognize the sacred obligations of wedlock. Such unions withstand the test of mismated temperaments and of circumstance. Even poverty, misfortune, and sorrow but draw the tie closer. J. T.

EATING AND COOKING NUTS.

AN ambitious young husband I know of, who is enormously proud of the cooking skill of his wife—she is a born cook—is especially ambitious to exert himself domestically when she is about to make an apple pie. "Are there not some nuts to crack?" he asks. He is willing to crack nuts or do any domestic task there is to be done, if she will put some nuts (chopped walnuts) in her apple pies.

All the domestic work in their establishment appeals to me as being carried out in a fashion which nominates those who participate as "good sports." Good sports are mighty wholesome people and almost universally good eaters. They live, and the more you live the more intelligently you learn to eat. You have to in order to have the energy for it.

Maybe we need to bring back some sport element, even if it is nothing more than a habit of mind, to replace the going a-nutting and its joys. In so doing we might gain a keener appreciation of what some one has called "the fat of the land"—our food nuts.

Nuts from the Shell.

In the old going a-nutting days, hostesses did not, of an evening, give their guests ice cream and cake, but they cracked and ate nuts. If this was done today perhaps we might have to make what may seem a triflingly indelicate suggestion—that is, to supply little souvenirs in the shape of welcome small bottles of dental floss and a retiring room. Nuts are somewhat of a trial to dental bridges, and are we not deadly enemies of all discomfort today? Parties at which one of the diversions is guessing the number of nuts in bags of peanuts which are later consumed—with a prize for the one guessing the nearest—may prove quite a gay affair.

Perhaps it takes really hungry people to enjoy nuts from the shell, and we who entertain are mostly well fed and even "fed up" before we go to a party. Old Evelyn, the second greatest of diarists, when visiting Italy wrote thus of the chestnut: "We give that food to swine in England, which is among the delicacies of princes in other countries, and being a large nut, it is lusty and masculine food for rusticks at all times, and better nourishment for husbandmen than cold and rusty bacon, yea, and beans to boot, instead of which they boil them in Italy with their bacon, and in Vigil time they ate them with their milk or cheese. The bread made of the flour is exceedingly nutritive. It is a robust food and makes women well complexioned, as I have read in a good author."

High in Calories.

Many a person who cannot eat beans can eat nuts, which yield far ore calories. It is easily imaginable that a diet of nuts, which have such high energy content, combined with the least concentrated foods, might indeed yield a fine complexion. Bad complexions as often come from lack of certain food elements as from anything else, and the nuts have each of the main food substances—starches, fats, and proteins.

But though nuts are so concentrated, we can eat them in quantity as we cannot eat plain sugar or butter or oils—right down, as it were. Yet we must not forget, if we would save ourselves digestive troubles, that though these concentrated foods may easily get by the tongue, because of their agreeable flavors, they must be mixed with less concentrated foods if they are to work their way along the red route and then up the mountain to brain power and muscle strength.

From Garnish to Sweets.

If we want to know much about nuts and their use and a flowery appreciation of them, we need to go to periodical literature. If we want to know how to cook them, or to use them in no end of dishes, we must go to the cook books compiled by churches and women's clubs, often for charity, the recipes representing choice things prepared in a great number of homes. I went through a few of these books and was surprised to find how many things there were containing nuts, as compared with those in standard cook books. There were scores, and they began with relishes and garnishes, and went through from soups and breads to vegetables, salads and sandwiches, puddings, cakes and cookies, and candies. And then there are the nut butters—many—and more nut milks for cooking than most of us have known or dreamed of.

Chestnuts, almonds, and peanuts are the nuts most used for soups. The almond and walnut are the greatest of the nuts used in sweet things, and in our American cookery the walnut is the most universally used, probably, from garnish to salad and sweet.

Nut Relish.

Almost any of the nut salads may be used in small portions for a relish, but I found this recipe in the lively "Queen Esther Cook Book," a compilation of quite choice and entertaining recipes. You may not only follow this, but it suggests variations to suit the taste: "One package cream cheese, a 10 cent bottle stuffed olives, one-fourth cup nut meats, butter size of walnut, one hard boiled egg. Cream cheese, adding a little cream if necessary. Chop the olives, nuts, and eggs quite fine, and add the cheese; then add the butter, creamed."

To Shell Pecans.

In order to get the meat out of a pecan whole, so as to use it for garnishing, put the nut unshelled on the stove and boil them for ten or fifteen minutes and cool. After breaking the shell you can sometimes peel it off as you peel off the shell of an egg.

Almond Wreaths.

There are great number of ways of making almond wreaths, but if you want to get almonds exquisitely browned, and most highly palatable, split blanched almonds and pack them on the top of a fruit cake, or any simple cake that requires an hour's baking. It is not easy to make this cake, but with a hot oven to start and a decreasing heat, you can get palatable effects of the best, although some perversity of heat may turn your almonds on edge. It is easiest to use these in the wreath tins—two rows put in slantwise, and made to look like a wreath with some bit of nuts or fruits along the middle like.

Chopping Nuts for Garnishing.

It is necessary to use the coarse knife for this work, so that the oil will not grease the pieces. The nuts so ground may be sprinkled on whipped cream or meringues, or in icings, or on mayonnaise over a fruit salad or used in cookies or breads or cakes or for sandwiches. The nut butter knife cannot be used unless you want to flavor your mayonnaise or cake, etc., with nuts, without having bits of the nuts visible. This is done for fish and cucumber salads in particular. Sometimes the medium sized knife may be used when a nut flour in which to roll small iced cakes is desired.

Grinding Nuts for Sandwiches.

Perhaps there is no fruit which goes better with nuts than the date. In grinding nuts for sandwich filling put the dates cut in bits first along with the nuts. If some sugar is added to this mixture it can be used as a confection.

Almond Buns.

An almond bun is nothing more than a plain flat bun with a little sugar and water flavored icing on its top, and this sprinkled with chopped almonds, just as coffee cake is garnished or finished.

Banana Pie.

A showy dessert is made, for wide sale, of sliced bananas wet with sugar sirup, then put into a cooked pie crust, covered with whipped cream, and sprinkled with nuts. A meringue shell may be used for greater elegance and wholesomeness in place of the pie crust or slices of sponge cake.

Chestnut Purees.

Chestnut purees may be used for either a soup or a dessert. Boil, shell, and blanch chestnuts, then cook till soft, and put through a sieve. This puree may be thinned with either a cream soup foundation or one of meat stock. If cooked for fifteen minutes with a sirup made of half as much sugar as puree, and half as much water as sugar, and flavored with vanilla, you can get a confection comparable to the imported marrons.

To Glace Walnuts.

Cook two cups of sugar with one cup of water to 290 degrees, or until brittle when dropped in water. Dip each walnut meat in this separately and drop on a buttered paper. As a dessert for a light meal these can be recommended, especially as only a few per person will be eaten. Fewer are acceptable than when the walnut is served plain.

Nut Creams, Butters, and Pastes.

The skin around nut meats, a sort of oiled paper wrapper inside the carton of the shell, to protect this oily food, is somewhat an enemy of easy digestion. In nut eating sanitaria great emphasis is placed on the fact that this skin must be removed and that the nuts must be masticated until like cream. Nut creams have been made for those without enough energy or good enough teeth to masticate by skinning the nuts, pounding them fine in mortars, and seasoning.

Nut butters are the same thing made with a nut mill or the food chopper. These are also worked smooth afterwards or into a cream or paste of even consistency. Boiling water added to these creams and whipped will make the nut milks, which must be made as wanted, as they will not hold up. Almonds made into a cream and mixed with honey are generally considered to be the finest of the pastes.

Good Looks Depend on Comfort

Did you ever stop to think how your looks and your personality can be affected by a pair of shoes?

Badly shaped shoes cause a nervous tension which may mar the face, little by little, with wrinkles, and make the muscles sag around the mouth.

The annoying, nagging effect of shoes which do not harmonize with your feet makes your facial expression less attractive than it could be if "your feet were off your mind."

Very high heels sometimes bring serious injury on the internal organs because the body is tilted forward out of natural balance and an unnatural strain results. This causes much unhappiness and loss of looks.

Wear Cantilever Shoes and let their comfort give to the face a happy expression, to the disposition a pleasantness which men admire, to the physique a strengthening tonic which exercise develops. Cantilevers are good looking shoes, too.

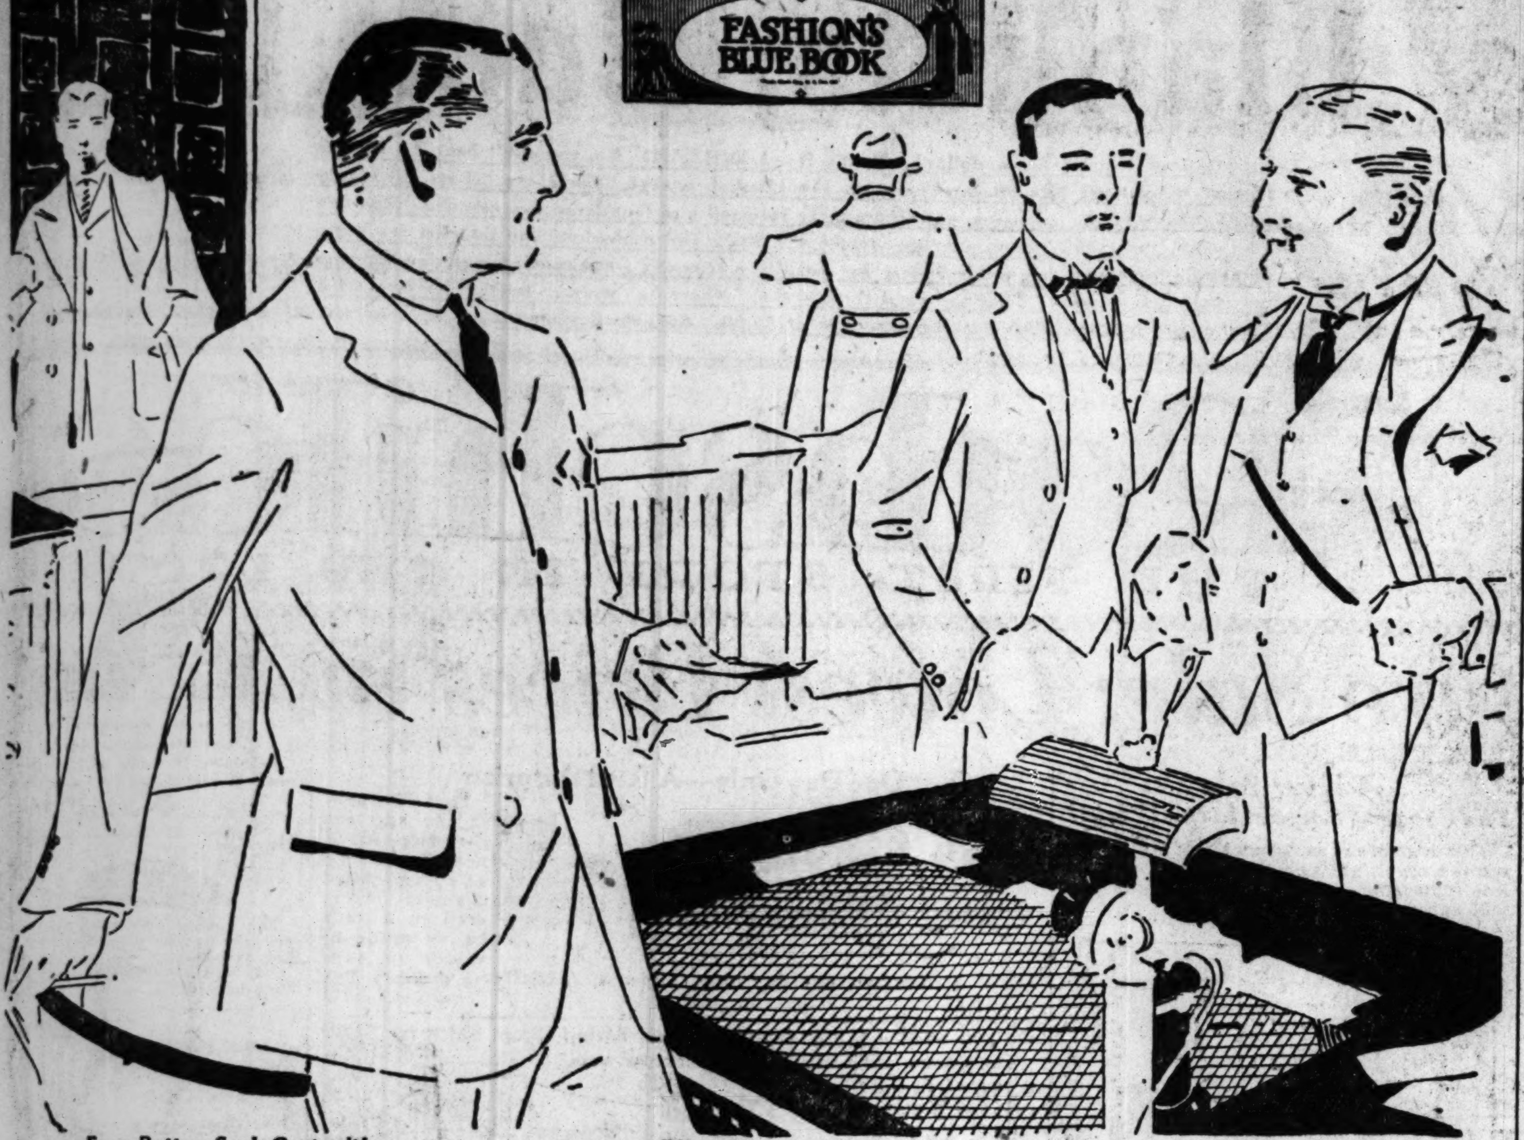
MEN'S FASHIONS



Four Button Sack Coat with Short Notched Lapels.

Three Button Sack Coat with Longer Roll.

TIGHT CLOTHES ON THE WANE.

By A. T. Gallico.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.—Just as the golf suit is not limited to the golf course, or the dinner jacket to the dinner table, or the morning coat to the hours before noon, so the business suit is not confined to the hours one spends at an office desk. The business suit is strictly an every day attire for street, office, or home, and since it is worn more than any other costume in one's wardrobe, much care and thought should go into its planning. A man is judged at first acquaintance more probably by his clothes than by anything else. Roughly, men can be divided into the two classes, flashy and conservative.

Members of the first set, if they would keep within the fashions of their group, must have a new suit far oftener than the conservatively dressed men, who may have several suits and wear them for several years. One of the only important changes in the conservative suit was the coming of the soft front and the abolishing of padding, making the shoulders natural.

Until recently, the chief sign of the flashy suit was the extremely tight waist, the narrow shoulders, one button, and the low vest, which permitted much loud colored silk shirt to be in evidence, a high back vent, and tight fitting trousers. The tight coats were probably a by-product of the war, a copying of the military cut. There evolved the "jazz suit," a many pocketed and belted affair, which found much favor with those young men who are always upon the lookout for something snappy, and also with the less tasteful set of actors.

But now there looms upon the horizon of fashion the possibility of tight clothes going out of style for the time being. You now see no one button suits in the windows which display to the flashily dressed man. The ordinary suit has two buttons, which is what the conservative sack coat has used for a long time, the difference being in the more exaggerated waist lines of the flashier model.

The style of the cheaper ready made clothes, which include these extreme suits, is usually about a season behind the fashion of the best dressed man. But it is true that the exceedingly conservative man is even slower to take up something new. In the case of the first mentioned, it is because the manufacturer does not offer the latest models to the ready made trade, perhaps because he wants to see it a success first with the rest of the dressers, and in the case of the conservative man the trouble lies in his unwillingness to give up the old routine of dress which he is used to and knows to be good taste.

It is the young men of discriminating taste, especially the best dressed college boys, who are often responsible for new ideas in dress. And it is the college man who doubtless is the cause of the increasing popularity of the short lapel, three or four button sack coat. Not that this is something new, for the well known New York clothing house that is the originator of this model has had it in stock for a great many years. But it was the college boy, in the east especially, who adopted it almost as a uniform, and so caused its introduction into the spotlight of fashion.

Not only will the devotees of the recent "jazz suit" turn to this model—and I was told by the head of a large chain of stores which caters to the majority that this would be the case probably by spring—but the conservative dresser as well, as evidenced by the present tendencies, will be persuaded to tear himself from the two button, long lapel sack coat that he has been wearing for many years, and will allow his lapel to be shortened and three or four buttons, three being a little more conservative, to be placed upon his coat.

The figure in the left foreground of the illustration is wearing this smart sack coat. There are four buttons in this case, which is more common on the younger men, but is quite correct for the youthful appearing elderly man who is wearing it here. You will observe that the lapels are notched and not peaked, as in the figure on the right end. The notched ones are smarter, but in the case of a stout man the peaked lapel is more suited to his figure, as the longer the line the better for a stout.

The middle figure in the drawing shows a three button sack coat, with a slightly longer roll, which is also better for a stout man. At the left in the background is a short lapel three button coat with patch pockets.

Coats should be rather shapely under the arms, conforming to curve of the body. There are either small vents or none at all, the latter being more desirable. Vests may be double breasted or single breasted, but the single is more common. It would not be a good plan to have both the coat and the vest double breasted, as the result would be too bulky. Vests are shorter this season, with a tendency to round the points. This, however, is again something to be avoided by the stout man, as he needs a more decided and longer waist line. There are four or five and sometimes six bunttons on the vest, when the coats have three or four.

Trousers are getting larger, having ample width at the hip, knee, and bottom. Sometimes there are plaits put in at the waist to give more fullness. Cuffs on trousers are disappearing except upon tweeds for country wear, and sport clothes.

MY MOST EMBARRASSING MOMENT

He Can't Forget.

Although I am a man nearly 80 years old, I still remember the most embarrassing moment of my life as plainly as though it were yesterday. It was during the Horace Greeley campaign for the presidency in the early 70's. I was a Greeley man, and to show my allegiance I, like many thousands of others, wore a Greeley hat. It was a stove pipe affair and white.

I went to church wearing it one fine Sunday morning. As I sat down in my pew I placed my hat on the window sill beside me. Unfortunately a gust of wind blew in, and the hat went sailing down the aisle. While the heads were all bowed in prayer I quietly sneaked down the aisle after it.

Returning to my seat, this time I placed the hat on the seat beside me for safe keeping. Soon we arose to sing. Imagine my feelings when I sat down on my hat. The snickers that went all around the church did not lesson my confusion any. A. C.

Quite a Mistake.

Being an unusually small school teacher is somewhat a handicap at times.

I was visiting another classroom when the superintendent came in to ask a few questions about the lesson, as was his custom when visiting.

Skipping around the class, he asked questions at random. This was my first year, and being a large city, the superintendent was not well acquainted with me.

"Little girl, tell me when is the longest day in the year?"

Not realizing he was pointing at me, I failed to respond.

You can imagine my embarrassment and his also. It was too late. The children laughed, thinking I did not know the answer. I. S.

As Bad as That?

I was waiting in a doctor's crowded waiting room when a woman came in carrying a pale, thin baby, who was so fretful she had to walk up and down the floor with it. The baby finally went to sleep and the woman sat down next to me and started to talk.

I said to her, "Poor baby, she certainly looks sick, doesn't she?"

"Well, I declare," she answered loudly, "there is nothing wrong with the baby. I didn't know she looked as bad as that. I came here for myself." M. L.

Thought She Was Home.

I was attending a university in a large city and earned my board by firing the furnace and driving my landlady's car for her. One afternoon I drove downtown on an errand for her. On the way down I happened to see a girl on whom I had been trying to make an impression. I invited her to go riding and she accepted.

We were riding slowly down a side street when whom did I see on the sidewalk but my landlady. She signaled for me to stop. When I did she opened the door, made us get out, and proceeded to give me a lecture. My feelings were indescribable. I just stood there and absorbed the words. My landlady, the lecture once delivered, took the car and drove off.

The girl gave me a withering look, informed me I was a cheap skate, and started off for the nearest car line. She never spoke to me again and I had a hard time reconciling my landlady and holding my job. J. B.

The Noiseless Secretary.

I had my new slippers on, my feet ached terribly. In the seclusion of my desk, which had a covered back, I decided to take them off. O, what a relief.

Serenely I typed away, when the persistent ringing of a bell warned me the boss wanted to dictate a letter. Grabbing my pencil and book, I dashed into his private office. The boss looked up to see what caused my noiseless entry—as a rule my high heeled slippers clicked noisily on the hardwood floors—when, lo and behold, I woke up to the fact that I was in my stocking feet!

Dictation or no dictation, believe me, it took me just two seconds to get back to my desk.

He Had a Reason.

I was riding on a car the other day and carried an umbrella with me. I had to stand in the coach and I leaned heavily on the umbrella for support. A man, standing next to me, asked me where I was going to get off.

Astonished I looked at him, and told him to mind his own business.

He said, "I just wanted to know when you will take your umbrella off my foot." C. Z.

We Minister to the Greatest Business in the World—

READ this article and learn something of Judd Co.'s way of reducing the Time, Labor and Cost of modern housekeeping. We solve the Washing problem of both clothes and dishes. The Labor of ironing has been reduced to a minimum, "sweeping day" is no longer to be dreaded, and cooking has become a positive pleasure for women who appreciate appliances that actually take the drudgery out of the daily routine of housework. To such women the Judd Co. stores should make an unusual appeal.

Write for descriptive literature or phone for a demonstration in your own home.

Housekeeping

THE "EASY" is a Vacuum Electric Washer (with or without a heating device). The 2 Copper Cups, as they plunge into the water are filled with air, this air opens up the mass of clothes, making it possible to force the scalding suds thru and thru every part of the fabric. This is WASHING.

THE "HOLIDAY" is a real dish-washer which fills, empties and cleans itself. In this machine all food particles are automatically screened from the water during the washing process.

THE "HORTON" foot control, open end ironer does quickly, easily and efficiently, virtually all of your ironing; it has no peer for doing "flat work," and the open end feature enables it to iron children's ruffled dresses, boys' waists, shirts, curtains and women's fine blouses.

THE "HAMILTON BEACH" Vacuum Sweeper has a soft, pliable brush to loosen all clinging and embedded dirt, such as threads, lint, hair and sand; and a powerful suction absorbs all of this foreign matter and carries it into the attached bag. A full line of attachments.

SPECIAL attention is called to the line of STANDARD ELECTRIC STOVES and RANGES. They warrant a close investigation. They are safe because of doing away with matches and the menace of an open flame fire. There is also no possibility of escaping gas nor of an explosion. They are economical because they are equipped with Insulated, Heat-retaining Aluminum Ovens and Wells. The food continues to cook long after the high heat is off. Model 301 is a "lamp socket range" that can be used on your lighting circuit exactly in the same manner as an electric iron is attached. It has a capacity sufficient for from 2 to 4 people. The only one of its kind on the market.

COUNTING all factors of Cost, Investment, Efforts Expended and Results obtained, cooking with a STANDARD is not only economical, it is profitable.

How to Tell Fortunes by Cards

says DORIS BLAKE

LAST Sunday, you remember, I gave you the meanings of the individual cards in their original and reversed positions, and warned you to be sure to save them to be used in connection with the card combination meanings I offer you today. I might add, too, that in the simpler methods of telling fortune by cards which I gave you in the first and second articles of this series you may use these same combinations and weave them into the fanciful tales you unfold to your inquirer.

I would suggest again that you cut these out and paste them on cardboard right away before the paper gets away via the waste basket route, because they are too long to repeat again in any future story. And in other methods I will give you these same combinations and their meanings are to be used.

COMBINATIONS OF FACE CARDS AND ACES.

Four aces—When these fall together they imply danger, financial loss, separation from friends, love troubles. The evil is mitigated in proportion to the number of them that are reversed.

Note: As stated previously, a new pack must be marked with an X at bottom of each card to indicate that it is reversed.

Three aces—Passing troubles, relieved by good news. If reversed, they mean foolish excesses.

Two aces—Portend union; if hearts and clubs it will be for good; if diamonds and spades, for evil. If one or both be reversed, the object of the union will fail.

Four kings—Honors, preferment, good appointments. Reversed, the good things will be of less value but will arrive earlier.

Three kings—Serious matters will be taken in hand with the best result unless any of the three cards be reversed, when it will be doubtful.

Two kings—Coöperation in business, upright conduct, and prudent enterprises to be crowned with success. Each one reversed represents an obstacle. All three reversed spell utter failure.

Four queens—A social gathering which may be spoiled by one or more being reversed.

Three queens—Friendly visits. Reversed, scandal, gossip, and possibly bodily danger to the inquirer.

Two queens—Petty confidences interchanged, secrets betrayed, a meeting between friends. When both are reversed there will be suffering for the inquirer, resulting from his own acts. Only one reversed means rivalry.

Four jacks—Roistering and noisy conviviality. Any of them reversed lessens the evil.

Three jacks—Worries and vexations from acquaintances, slander calling the inquirer's honor in question. Reversed, it foretells a passage at arms with a social inferior.

Two jacks—Loss of goods, malicious schemes. If both are reversed the trouble is imminent; if only one, it is near.

COMBINATIONS OF PLAIN CARDS.

Four tens—Good fortune, wealth, success in whatever enterprise is at hand. The more they are reversed the greater the number of obstacles in the way.

Three tens—Ruin brought about by litigation. When reversed the evil is decreased.

Two tens—Unexpected luck which may be connected with a change of occupation. If one be reversed it will come soon, within a few weeks possibly; if both are reversed it is a long way off.

Four nines—Accomplishment of unexpected events. The number that are reversed stands for the time to elapse before the fulfillment of the surprise.

Three nines—Health, wealth, and happiness. Reversed, discussions and temporary financial difficulties caused by imprudence.

Two nines—Prosperity and contentment, possibly accompanied by business matter, testamentary documents, and possibly a change of residence. Reversed, small worries.

Four eights—Mingled success and failure attending journey or the taking of a new position. Reversed, undisturbed stability.

Three eights—Thoughts of love and marriage; new family ties, honorable intentions. Reversed, flirtation, dissipation, and foolishness.

Two eights—Frivolous pleasures, passing love fancies, an unlooked for development. Reversed, paying the price of folly.

Four sevens—Schemes and snares, intrigue prompted by evil passions, contention, and opposition. Reversed, small scores of impotent enemies.

Three sevens—Sadness from loss of friends, ill health, remorse. Reversed, slight ailments or unpleasant reaction after great pleasure.

Two sevens—Mutual love, an unexpected event. Reversed, faithlessness, deceit, or regret.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies Are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

KNOT STITCH BABY CAP.

IS there any work more fascinating than making something pretty for a baby, whether the baby belongs to you or to some friend?

The dear little cap shown here is a most sensible one to make, for it is bound to be durable, aside from the fact it is so dainty and pretty. In the summer China silk will make a good lining, and during the cold months a lining may be made of any preferred material, and be simply tacked lightly to the cap.

Materials required: Two balls of cotton, size 100, white.

Ch 8, join to form a ring, work 24 tr c over ring and join.

2d row: Ch 3, *1 knot stitch, skip 2 sts and d c in next tr c, knot st, 1 tr c in same st, repeat from * all around and join.

3d row: Ch 3, knot st, *1 d c in next st, knot st, 1 d c in same st, knot st, 1 d c in next st, repeat from * all around. Work 4 more rows increasing a sufficient number of times to keep work flat.

Answers to Sewing Queries.

MRS. M. W.: If you haven't enough handkerchief linen to finish your blouse, why not make the collar and cuffs of blue and white, or any other color combination you like, checked organdie or French gingham? You could replace these with all white later on, if you tired of them.

* *

MRS. F. W. C.: Your navy blue messaline blouse would look well embroidered in wool in two or more bright, contrasting colors, or, if you don't care for the gay colors, black and tan or black and green would be smart.

A FRIEND IN NEED

BY SALLY JOY BROWN

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send parcels to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

They Have No Income.

"I am the mother of three small children and my husband has been out of work for the last six months. The baby is but 2 months old, so it is impossible for me to leave him and go out to work. Our little boy has been sick and the doctor tells me he ought to be out of doors every day. He has no warm clothing, so if any one among your readers has clothing for a boy 2 or a girl 5 years of age, I will greatly appreciate it. MRS. A. C."

Request of Ex-Service Man.

"Frequent reading of your column convinces us you have shown real interest in the ex-service man, so we turn to you at this time to enlist your aid and sympathy. We would like to receive phonograph records to make a life which is often monotonous a little brighter. If you can, therefore, will you help us to secure these records by making our needs known? Some of us have been here over fifteen months, and it will certainly be a great relief if we can only listen to the voice of a world which we once were part of and may yet be again through the instrumentality of these records.

"FROM AN ILLINOIS BOY."

I am hastening to publish this, hoping the Illinois boy's request will meet with quick response.

Grateful for Microscope.

"I wonder if any of your readers has a discarded microscope to pass on to a fellow who needs but cannot afford to buy one? I will be grateful for it. N. S. C."

I hope the much desired microscope will be forthcoming soon.

Needs Sewing Machine.

"My husband has been out of work four months. He has a broken arm. I have five small children, and plenty of old clothes to be made over. I wonder if any of your kind readers has a sewing machine not in use.

"MRS. G. S."

A sewing machine would lighten this mother's work considerably. Is there one for her?

Who Has Coat for Loretta?

"I am writing to you to ask if there is some one of your readers who might have a coat she has no more use for. I am 13 years old, go to school every day, and I need a coat so badly. My brother, 16 years old, works every day and is the only support of mother and me. I do a few chores after school and Saturdays, which nets me $4 a week, but my brother only makes $12 a week, so I cannot afford to save up for a coat. Anything would be appreciated for my brother, too.

"LORETTA."

This appeal from Loretta should not fall on deaf ears. If some one has a dress or coat for a growing school girl of 13 I hope the child may have it.

Request for Clothing.

"I am an old man, going on 60 years old, and I wonder if you could get me any kind of clothes. I am 5 feet 11 inches tall. If you could get me some underwear would be much obliged. W. B."

I am certain the request for clothing from this man will not go unanswered.

In Destitute Circumstances.

"I am in destitute circumstances. My husband, an ex-service man, has been out of work for eleven months. I have a boy 5 years of age and a baby boy 1 month old. Any help given me would be greatly appreciated. E. G."

This is certainly a worthy case and deserves assistance.

How Many Pounds Would You Like to Gain In One Week?

Your weight indicates your health. Build it up and be well.
Through this new, scientific discovery anybody now can have a plump, trim figure.

Amazing Scientific Discovery of Vitamines Quickly Builds Up Thin, Scrawny Figures—No Drugs or Dieting Necessary—Quick Relief For Tired, Worn-Out People.

VITAMINES—those mysterious substances found in certain foods, are now agreed, by the best scientific minds in the country, to be primarily responsible for building firm flesh and producing vigor and vitality. Lack of vitamines in the daily diet causes nervousness, loss of weight and vitality, headaches and many of the deficiency diseases, such as skin eruptions, emaciation, rickets, scurvy and pellagra.

Quick Relief—No Drugs or Dieting

But when Alexander Vitamines are added to the diet the results are amazing in their rapidity. Within a few days an emaciated, scrawny figure begins to round out—bony angles and ugly hollows disappear. Your weight quickly becomes what it should be according to your height. The flabby, useless tissues which are now a handicap become firm flesh and muscle—rich, red blood is produced—tasks now wearisome are quickly done because the food you eat is converted in the proper channels of energy.

Gained 3½ Pounds in 4 Days

"I gained 3½ pounds the first four days I took Alexander Vitamines and am still gaining steadily. * * * I have now increased my weight 9¼ pounds and feel like a different person. I am still using Alexander Vitamines and advising all my thin and ailing friends to do likewise."

Gains 8 Pounds Quickly

"Alexander Vitamines have increased my weight 8 pounds and done wonders for my complexion. I am going to keep on taking them, for they are the first thing I ever tried that would put weight on me, and I had tried everything I read about. I feel better, too, since taking the Vitamines, and can do more work. I would advise every scrawny, nervous woman to take Alexander Vitamines."

1218—Boy's suit. Sizes 2, 4, and 6 years. Size 4 requires 1⅝ yards of 36 inch material and ¾ yard of 27 inch lining.

1258—Woman's dress. Sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 50, 52, 54, and 56 inches bust measure. Size 46 or 48 requires, for dress of one material, 5⅛ yards of 36 inch material and 1 yard of 36 inch lining.

1215—Woman's or misses' breakfast coat. Sizes 16 years and 36, 40, and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 36 inch material with ¾ yard of 36 inch contrasting.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

THE redingote style of dress, with its long lines, is one that is becoming to slender and full figures alike, and pattern No. 1258 is one of the best of its kind.

The skirt is cut in two pieces, and there is a separate waist lining, to which the skirt is attached; the sleeves are also set into this lining. The front of the skirt through the center extends up over the front of the underwaist, and is fastened to the right side of the underwaist along its edge, while the left side is left free and finished with snaps for fastening to the left side of the underwaist. The underwaist fastens down the middle front.

The overdress part has small darts at the front of the armholes, which help to give the right fullness over the bust.

Black Canton crêpe, with a little cream lace showing at the neck and edges, would be attractive.

In many instances the sleeves are made of some different material, such as georgette, chiffon, figured crêpe, or plain material may be embroidered or decorated in some effective manner.

The pattern of the overdress allows for hems to be turned across the bottom and up the fronts. This is work that must be well done, or the dress will never look right. In some materials that won't crease the first narrow turning of the hems must be basted, and after the second turning will come a second basting. In woolen or silk the slip or blind stitch should be used for hemming, taking the stitches so they will not come through to the right side. In removing the bastings cut the threads at intervals, and then use a stilletto to put the threads away, taking care not to catch a thread of the material.

Pattern No. 1215 is for a breakfast coat, one of those dainty and becoming garments that all women love. Changeable taffeta or satin make up charmingly, and narrow ruffles of the same material make good trimming.

Use French seams everywhere possible, and don't trim off too close to the first stitching. Let the second stitching leave a quarter inch seam. You will find this will press down better and be less noticeable than a narrower one. The machine tension should be carefully adjusted and the stitches should not be too short, else the seam will not lie flat.

The boy's suit, pattern No. 1218, would make up beautifully in gray or natural colored linen. Clothes for small boys and girls should be of wash materials, even though the weather may be cold. Houses and apartments are so thoroughly heated usually wash materials are heavy enough.

The straight trousers are sure to find favor with the small boy, for they will seem to him much like those of his older brothers. Sometimes when it is not easy to understand a pattern it is time well spent to carefully pin the entire thing together, following the directions and notches carefully.

If Skin Breaks Out and Itches Apply Sulphur

Just the moment you apply Mentho-Sulphur to an itching, burning or broken out skin, the itching stops and healing begins, says a noted skin specialist. This sulphur preparation, made into a pleasant cold cream, gives such a quick relief, even to fiery eczema, that nothing has ever been found to take its place.

Because of its germ destroying properties, it quickly subdues the itching, cools the irritation and heals the eczema right up, leaving a clear, smooth skin in place of ugly eruptions, rash, pimples or roughness.

You do not have to wait for improvement. It quickly shows. You can get a little jar of Mentho-Sulphur at any drug store.

REAL LOVE STORIES

Do you know a real love story—one that is stranger than fiction? It is the idea that is wanted. No attention will be paid to literary style. The Tribune will pay $5 for every story published. No manuscripts returned. Address Doris Blake, The Tribune, Chicago.

HAPPINESS FOR ALL.

IN a little town in West Virginia there occurred a romance between four pals—two boys, George and John, and two girls, Betty and Jane.

One bright day in autumn Betty and Jane were asked by the boys on a camping trip to the mountains, where George and Betty found that something better than just being pals had entered into their young hearts. But after they were engaged a quarrel occurred.

In the meantime Jane and John were about to be married and were spending one of the happiest days of their lives together when, all of a sudden, they were aroused by George, who was as pale as a ghost and who fell upon his knees in front of Jane. He told her everything and begged her to plead with Betty as it was all his fault. Jane went to plead with Betty, but to no avail. George, broken hearted, left for the Cape.

Two months passed. Betty lived a lonely life. One evening as the snow was falling heavily she was getting off a street car when she fell and broke her ankle. A crowd had gathered, for they had just taken Betty into a nearby drug store and people were anxious to know how it occurred.

John saw them carry Betty into the store. He offered to assist her home.

He fell deeply in love with her. During the next few weeks Jane saw the change in him and made him confess. She gave him back the ring. In a few months John and Betty were married.

George, lonesome for his mother, came back. He found his home town changed in many ways. He heard that Betty and John were married and living happily together. He goes to see Jane, whom he later learned to love. As time flew by they also were married.

Ruddy Cheeks—Sparkling Eyes —Most Women Can Have

Says Dr. Edwards, a Well-known Ohio Physician

Dr. F. M. Edwards for 17 years treated scores of women for liver and bowel ailments. During these years he gave to his patients a prescription made of a few well known vegetable ingredients mixed with olive oil, naming them Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. You will know them by their olive color.

These tablets are wonder workers on the liver and bowels, which cause a normal action, carrying off the waste and poisonous matter in one's system.

If you have a pale face, sallow look, dull eyes, pimples, coated tongue, headaches, a listless, no-good feeling, all out of sorts, inactive bowels, you take one of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets nightly for a time and note the pleasing results.

Thousands of women and men take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the successful substitute for calomel—now and then just to keep them fit. 15c and 30c.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped, addressed envelope.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

Censors Their Mail

"Dear Miss Blake: We are sisters, 17 and 19 years of age, respectively, and are in dire need of your advice. Do you believe it is proper for our father to open our mail? Has he the right to know our personal affairs by opening the mail himself? C. N."

Yes, father has a legal and parental right to know what his young hopefuls are up to. There really should be no question involved, for you should receive no mail that you would not want him to see.

Duty to Host.

"Dear Miss Blake: A friend of mine and myself have been invited to a party at which there will be present four girls with whom we have had some misunderstanding. Since the host desires us to be on friendly terms with all present, kindly advise us as to the proper proceedings at the party. "CHARLES."

One of the unflinching rules of etiquette toward a host or hostess is to be friendly with every guest.

Take Father's Advice.

"Dear Miss Blake: I have been going about with a young fellow seven years my senior. He has gone to another state for a better position, and I have not seen him since he went away. I love him, and I feel I cannot live without him. I know he loves me, too, as he has told me again and again. The only thing which blocks us is my father. If mail is sent to my home it is opened, and I am not allowed to go about with any fellows. I love my father and would like to please him, as he is good to me, and I haven't any mother. MAUDE."

You did not disclose your age to me, and upon that would depend my answering in yours or in father's favor. But I suppose you are pretty young, in which event you would better listen to father's advice and do what he would want you to do.

Take Mother's Advice.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl of 16. My mother tells me it isn't proper for me to go out and keep dates because I have an older sister. Will you please tell me if she is right? Another thing, what time do you think is proper for me to come home at night? "BILLIE."

Mothers usually are right about their 16 year old girls, because they want them to make nice, eligible wives later on. You just take mother's advice, dear.

All Quite Unnecessary.

"Dear Miss Blake: Do you think it is right for a girl to kiss a fellow she cares for when he leaves her after taking her home at night? Is it right to let a fellow know you care for him? "E. H."

Entirely unnecessary, neither wise nor conducive to the longevity of a budding romance! In the young man's eyes, no matter what argument he may bring to pressure for the time being, you lose something. If it is not respect, it is the lure of the unattainable. I think it is both. About letting him know you care—be sure first that he cares and cares deeply.

They Come and Go.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am almost 18 years of age and went out a few times with a nice fellow three years my senior. He behaved like a perfect gentleman and told me and showed me that he cared for me a great deal. The last time we parted he told me he would send me a letter in which he would make an appointment, but the letter never came. Although I am not grieving for him, I think I should like him to explain himself to me. Please, Miss Blake, advise me what to do. I have his home and business addresses, also his phone number. "GRACE."

Don't use his address, nor his telephone number, dear, unless you want him to think extremely lightly of you. It is just one of the incidents that make up the average girl's life, and you must let it pass without demanding any explanation or giving it any serious consideration at all.

It's Often Unwise.

"Dear Miss Blake: Kindly tell me if it is proper for a girl to ask a boy friend to go with her to parties when he does not keep steady company with her, but is just an acquaintance. "JANE."

Not if there is any expense attached to the going, Jane. And unless a young man has shown a marked preference for your company it would not be wise to extend him invitations that he might feel obliged to accept out of sheer politeness.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

PART SEVEN

JANUARY 22, 1922.

THE TEENIE WEENIES.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

THE LITTLE PEOPLE HAVE A DAY OF FUN.

BY WM. DONAHEY.

THE little friends of the Teenie Weenies are showing remarkable ingenuity in coloring the pictures printed each Sunday and it is becoming harder all the time to select the ten best as prize winners.

The names of the ten boys and girls who did the best work on last Sunday's picture are announced in the last column.

If you haven't won a prize so far keep on trying. Get out your crayons or your water colors and see what you can do with this picture. It offers plenty of opportunity to display your artistic ability.

In coloring this picture the sky can be blue, the tree in the background a light blue-green, and the tree in the foreground a brown with a greenish tint. The bird is brown with a light gray breast, and the ice should be colored a light green-blue tint. The ground, where the snow has melted away about the fire, should be light tan, and the logs of the fire can be dark gray or brown. Gogo should have a dark brown complexion, and the Chinaman's face should be tan. The rest of the Teenie Weenies have pink faces, and their clothes can be colored any way you like.

When you have it all fixed up, send your picture in, and a big Teenie Weenie book will be given as a prize for each of the ten best pictures submitted.

Address your picture to The Teenie Weenies, care of The Sunday Tribune, Chicago.

Be sure to give you name and address correctly. Use this coupon if you like:

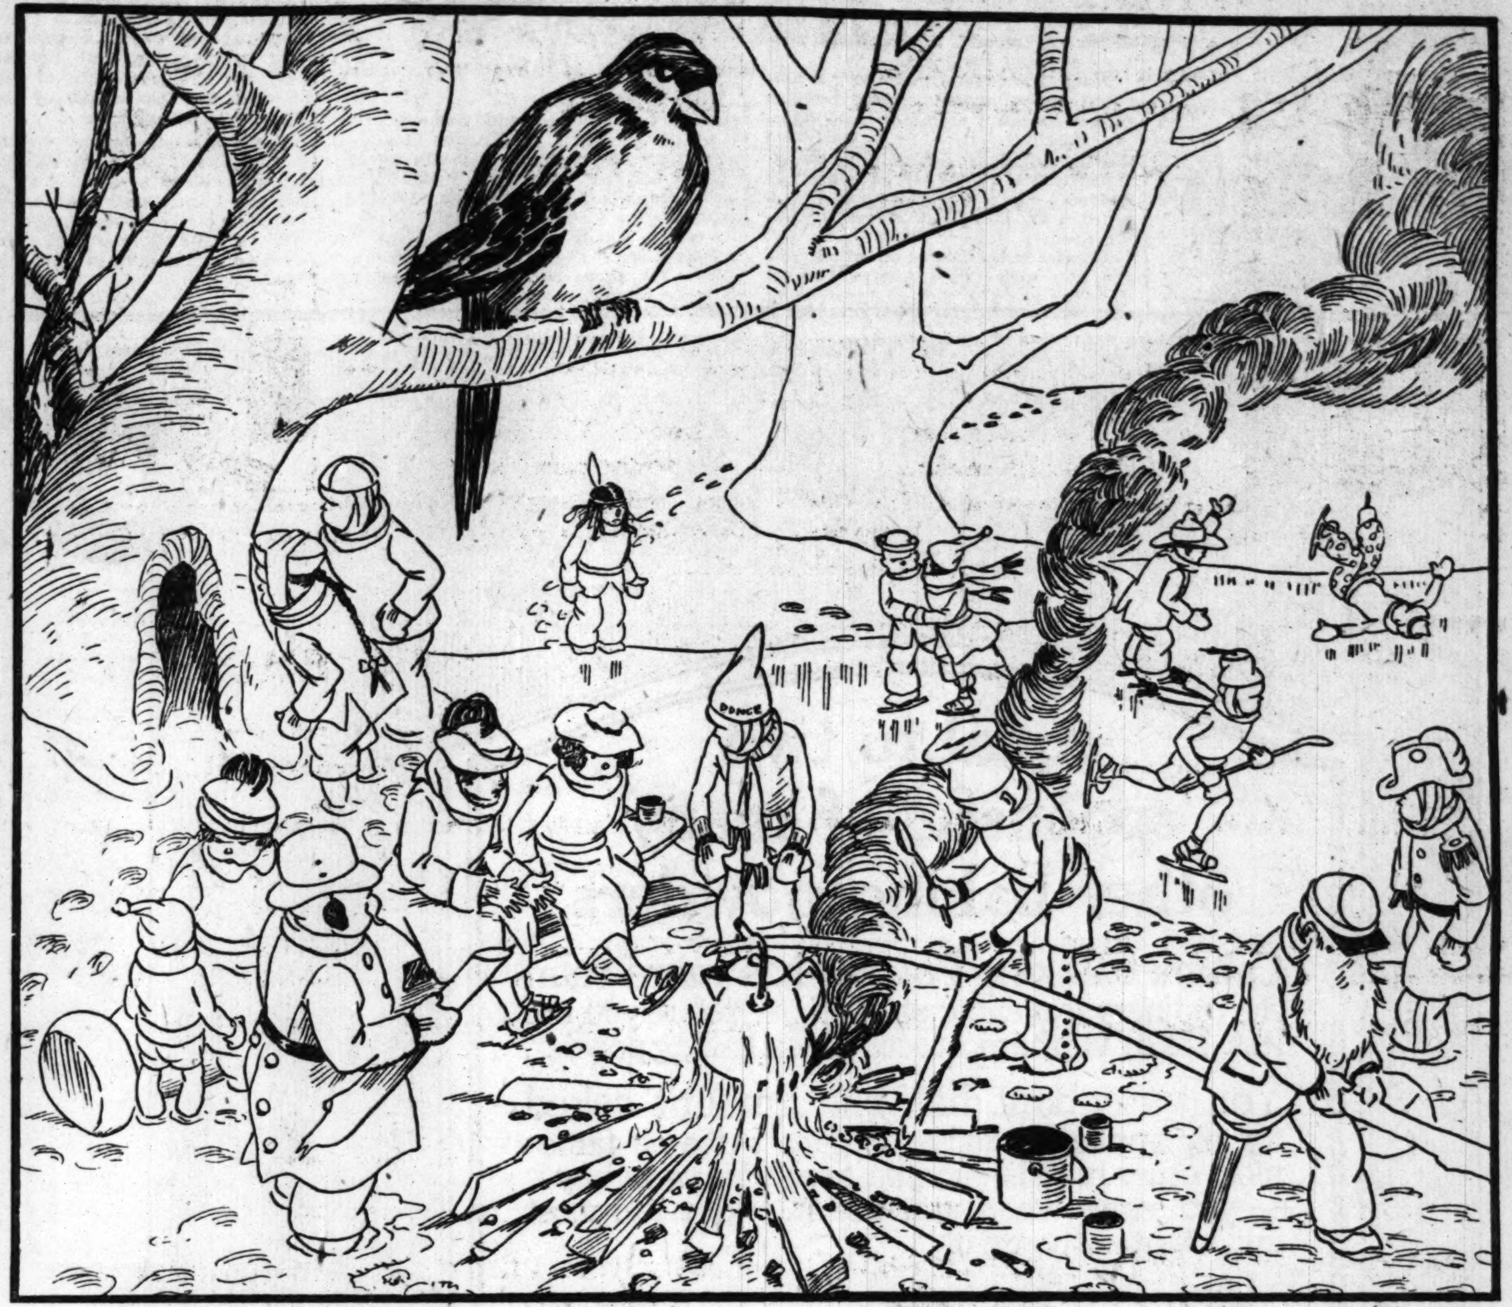
CITY .... STATE ....

I am .... years old and in .... grade.



"WHOSE clothes are those drying out on the back porch?" asked the General as he hung his plumed hat in the closet under the front stairs. "Dunce, have you been skating and fallen through the ice?"

"Y-y-y-yes, s-s-s-sir," answered the Dunce, who was shivering by the tiny fireplace.

"Well, didn't I tell you fellows to keep off the ice until it was thick enough to be safe?"

"Y-y-yes, s-s-sir."

"Well, why do you disobey?"

"Well, I-I-I-I thought the ice looked s-s-strong enough to hold all right, so I t-t-took my skates and went s-s-skating in that old bucket over by the orchard," answered the Dunce.

"Well, I have a good mind to take you out and give you a sound whipping for your disobedience," said the General as he glanced at a piece of toothpick which stood in the corner of the chimney.

"Y-y-y-yes, s-s-s-sir," stuttered the frightened Dunce.

"Please, General," pleaded the Lady of Fashion, looking up from her tatting, "the Dunce didn't mean to be naughty. He didn't think, and I'm sure if you forgive him this time he will not do it again."

"Y-y-yes'am," said the Dunce.

"I've talked and talked until I'm tired," said the General. "I'm afraid some one will get drowned; that's why I'm so cross. I don't want to have anything like that happen. The ice always freezes over in the pans and buckets first, and when the thin ice breaks it is almost impossible to get out, for the sides of the buckets and pans are too smooth to climb."

"Yes, sir!" answered the Dunce, for the General had been talking straight at him.

Here are the winners of Teenie Weenie books for the best work on the picture printed last Sunday:

Leonard Nelson, 672 41st street, Rock Island, Ill.
Frank Sesak, Box 702, North Baltimore, O.
Roger Rogers, 114 East Arch street, Marquette, Mich.
Leah Aho, Box 835, Hurley, Wis.
Berniece Vessendall, 3313 South 23d street, Omaha, Neb.
Billy Peacock, 1516 Edmond street, St. Joseph, Mo.
Stanley W. Young, 303 South Chicago avenue, Freeport, Ill.
Harry Deane, 1742 Belmont avenue, Chicago.
Geraldine Muffitt, 339 Oliver street, Whiting, Ind.
Shirley McCook, Streator, Ill.

"Now, I'll tell you what I'll do," continued the General. "If everybody gives me his solemn promise to keep off the ice until it really freezes, we'll have a regular skating party the first time the ice is thick enough to hold."

"Well, ye won't have to wait long," put in Grandpa, who was almost sitting in the fireplace. "It's goin' to freeze harder than a dog biscuit within the next day or two, or I'm no weather prophet."

All the Teenie Weenies promised the General to keep off the ice until it was frozen strong enough to be safe, and they did not have long to wait, for Grandpa's prophecy came true.

The weather turned cold, and three days later the ice was six Teenie Weenie feet thick on the pond back of the shoe house.

A day was set for the skating party, and for some time there was much sharpening of tiny skates. The Cook, with the help of the Lady of Fashion, made many dainty sandwiches and almost a thimbleful of delicious cookies.

Although the weather was mighty cold, the little folks did not mind it a bit, for the men soon built a roaring fire. A big clothespin was dragged up near the fire where the little skaters could sit and warm their Teenie Weenie toes. Tilly Titter flew down and sat on a limb of a bush overhead, where she watched the fun for a long time.

There were races and hockey games, fancy skating and many amusing tumbles as the little people tried all sorts of tricks.

At noon the Cook made a big potful of hot cocoa, and in no time the hungry little folks emptied the thimbleful of cookies and ate all the sandwiches.

The Teenie Weenies were so tired that night they all fell asleep in their chairs around the fireplace, to the great disgust of Grandpa. "Them that want to skate kin skate," muttered the old man, looking about at the sleeping Teenie Weenies. "But I'll do all my skatin' right here by the fire," and, drawing a great caterpillar fur rug tight about him, he blinked sleepily at the glowing coals.

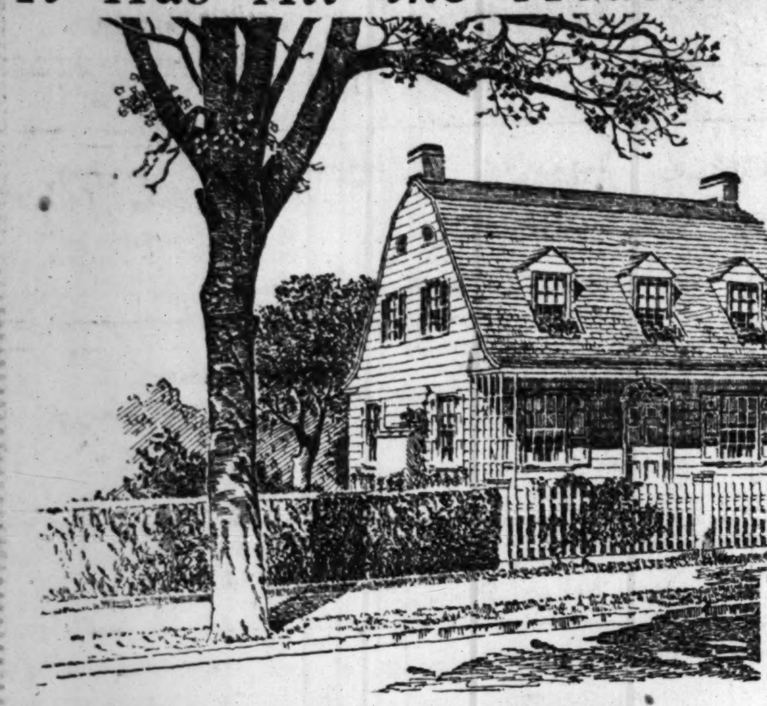
It Has All the Modern Conveniences



By Anita de Campi.

Anita de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Anita de Campi, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped, addressed envelope for personal reply.

CAN'T you just picture the family phaeton coming up the street, the old coachman alighting, tieing old Dobbin to the hitching post, and the children hopping out and running to greet rosy cheeked grandma, who, awaiting Dobbin's familiar whinny, has hurriedly popped the pies into the oven and is in the doorway all wreathed in smiles?

Old fashioned comfort and welcome are written in large characters all over the house.

And now for the surprise—sure there was to be one! This isn't an old house—it is a new one—1922 model, if you please, designed with all modern conveniences and with the latest devices and arrangements to make housekeeping easy for the servantless household. Well, that is a surprise now, isn't it?

Let's just imagine Grandma Cynthia has invited us over. Before we got inside she'd point out the trellises at each end of the front porch, which sweeps across the whole front of the house.

Then she'd point out the large front windows, each divided into many small panes or lights—a little harder to wash, perhaps, but good looking, you'll admit. And the green window blinds—aren't they artistic, and then again, they're such a protection if the folks have to go away for a few days and leave the house alone. And they may be closed on snowy days and opened again when the storm has abated.

Of course you can't have helped but notice that the whole exterior of the house is of lap siding with a double pitched roof which architects call a gambrel roof. Then those dormer windows, each with a flower box—well, doesn't it make one wish to own such a home all for himself?

But now grandmother hurries us inside.

To our left is a large combination living and dining room with a generous fireplace and tile hearth. The room, which is as long as the house—twenty-one feet—offers ample space for the artistic arrangement of the furniture without crowding.

From the main entrance hall we go into the kitchen. It is indeed a surprise to find the kitchen located in the front of the house. But many of our best architects and decorators say this is as it should be. The busy housewife who spends half her life in the kitchen can vary the dull monotony by looking out in the street and see who is coming to visit Mrs. Smith next door, or know that Mrs. Brown across the street is getting a new rug, while she is basting the chicken or washing the dishes. Truly, this is the woman's age, says grandma.

But the location of it is not the only marvel of the kitchen. Built-in pantry cases, cupboards on each side of the sink, and spacious shelves over the table along the wall next to the range are wonderful work and time savers. And the little closet for keeping brooms and what-not handy is well worth mentioning.

Last, but not least, just outside the kitchen door there is a little place for the ice box, which is conveniently iced without muddying the kitchen, and the rear porch helps to shade the kitchen in hot weather and has many uses that the housewife can readily devise.

Space limits us to only brief mention of the master's bedroom, with its own fireplace and mantel, the window seat, the bathroom and linen closet, and the other comfortably large bedroom and clothes closet—all on the second floor.

The basement, too, is well laid out. There is the well lighted laundry—four windows—the vegetable room, placed as far as possible from the heater room, and the coal bin, walled up to the ceiling.

As this is a frame building, additional care has been taken to prevent plaster cracks on ceilings due to shrinkage in the wood frame, and metal lath, instead of ordinary lath, is used under the plaster. Grandmother says that the extra expense for using metal lath was little and is more than made up in lessened upkeep cost for interior decorating. Metal lath is, of course, more fire resistive than common lath, and is specified under the stairs and over the heating plant, places most vulnerable to fire.

LOVE LETTERS

The Tribune will pay $5 for every love letter published. So, if you can write a good one, or if you have one in your private or family possessions you would like to enter in the contest, send it to Doris Blake, The Sunday Tribune, Chicago. As no letters will be returned, send copies of the ones you wish to retain possession of.

"FOR SALE CHEAP."

MY DEAREST: There are only two words in the English language tonight — "Kathleen" and "yes." The first, your dear name; the second, the precious message you sent me today.

When I tore open your wire a blur swam before my eyes. For perhaps fifteen seconds I stared at those dancing, jiggling letters in a confusion which was agonized despair and ecstatic happiness. Pretty bad off, wasn't I? Suddenly the words stood out like a benediction, clear and sweet: "Yes. Kathleen."

Remember that letter in which you said you were tired of twenty story buildings and the click of typewriters and the smartness of office boys? I read that letter—for the eighteenth time—sitting on a bleached log on a strip of beach a few weeks ago. When I finished some blessed inspiration made me turn square around and there on a little elevation, its windows looking out upon the sound, was a beach cottage marked "For Sale Cheap"; the most perfect love nest that ever beckoned to a girl who is tired of the city and to a man who wants a home and Kathleen. Everything shipshape except for those tantalizing letters! Kathleen wasn't sure yet.

Then this morning paradise opened up and took us in. Kathleen sent a three lettered, one worded message!

I found the cottage still marked "For Sale Cheap." It is furnished, dear, even to the laying of the grate fire. We'll merely take off our hats and start keeping house. I sat for an hour in the sun porch dreaming of you and me together there looking out upon the water, the islands, the mountains; gathering driftwood on the beach, digging clams in the sand, hunting for agates, and when a sou'wester is on [you'll love them, dear holding hands by the fireplace, sure of the stanchness of our house and of the strength of each other's love.

Kathleen, I'm a boy tonight; a child in my enthusiasm, and children like repetition. I want another "Yes." Here and now I am asking you to leave your clanging city and come west at once. We will be married and start a honeymoon in the cottage that will never end.

BAKING POWDER
CALUMET BAKING POWDER CO. CHICAGO, U.S.A.

-one spoonful

equal to two spoonsful of many other baking powders

Calumet Baking Powder has more than the ordinary leavening strength, therefore you use less. It's by far the most economical baking powder.

You pay about half the amount asked for high-priced brands. It goes twice as far as most other brands—so you save when you buy it — you save when you use it. But the most important economy of is in its superior quality. Regardless of price, Calumet is the highest grade baking powder made. It is absolutely pure in the can—in the baking. Leaves no harmful residue.

Calumet wherever placed, always gives satisfaction. It is the largest selling brand of baking powder in the world and is made in the largest, cleanest, most up-to-date Baking Powder factories in existence.

The millions of housewives who use Calumet secure better bakings at a more economical cost than those who do not use it.

With all this evidence of superiority—with all this proof of better bakings, why should you be satisfied to stand the exorbitant expense of over priced powders or the faults and failings of cheap, inferior brands. You shouldn't—and you won't—after one Calumet bake-day trial.

Beware of This—

A pound can of Calumet contains full 16 oz. Some baking powders come in 12 oz cans instead of 16 oz. cans. Be sure you get a pound when you want it.

The Morning "Bracer"
by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.]—Call it by any other name, a fresh air cocktail, if you will, and it will be as bracing!

How do you make it? Of oxygen, as pure as you can get it, and use your lungs as the shaker! Fill your lungs to overflowing, as no damage will accrue if you do. Quaff slowly and heartily. Take from fifteen to twenty quaffs on arising every morning for the rest of your life, and your chances of dying of anything but old age will be mollified.

A nightcap made of the same ingredient and taken in as many doses is recommended as well. But the morning bracer is the life preserver.

But why should I go on telling you what you know full well yourself? You know what fresh air means to the system, to the complexion, to the mind, quite as well as I. You have discovered its value in identically the same way—by imbibing it.

But I just want to rally you to the cause of making a steady drinker of fresh air out of you rather than an occasional tipster. Let's make it the national drink, everybody doing his and her little daily share and preaching the doctrine far and wide. Then you may safely put up a wager on seeing a hundred happy faces to one you may now chance to meet on the morning subway, elevated, or train.

Fresh air, not bread, is the staff of life. You can live without bread much longer than without air. As Shakespeare wouldn't say, "Just try it once!"

Learn to Breathe Correctly.

"You cannot reach the best possible growth and development if deprived of fresh air for even a few hours a day," says Dr William Lee Howard. "One may live in a room where fresh air constantly circulates, yet not get its benefit through wrong starts in the morning and ignorance of the right methods of breathing.

"When you attempt to run some distance there comes a stitch in the side, and what that really means is that you have discovered a large area of unused lung cells which you did not know existed in you. These have remained closed in a long time and are now opening to receive the fresh air you are pumping in through extra efforts to breathe. These unused cells are slightly stuck together and collapsed upon themselves. The sharp pain is due to the air forcing them apart. When you keep going and the distress is over, you get into what is called 'second wind.' You are then using all your bellows capacity and force. You are burning a lot of stored up waste material and also giving new life to internal organs.

Lung Capacity Unused.

"About one-third the lung capacity is unused by the average person. This third is the lower portion of the lungs, where you get that stitch.

"The human bellows differs from the mechanical in having its leathery covering contain a spongy mass of air cells. Around these air cells flows the blood. It reaches every cell open for it. Remember this distinction—every cell open for it. All impurities in the blood are burnt up by the oxygen sent to it. Then the building blood is sent by means of arteries, to every portion, organ, and cell in the body. Upon its return to the lungs by way of the veins and heart it carries waste stuff in the form of carbonic acid, which is thrown off when you exhale your breath. Right here is where so many breathe wrong—they take deep inhalations, but neglect the absolutely necessary forcible exhalations. Those who practice deep breathing usually try to see how fully they can inflate the lungs and chest, but not how completely they empty them."

Did you ever stop to think that poor circulation is mostly due to improper breathing; that attacks of indigestion may be relieved by breathing away down to the bottom of the abdomen, so that the oxygen may burn up the waste material and give the abdominal muscles the energy to work with; that fat may be burned off by internal combustion; flat chests are so because the lungs are not developed; lassitude, sleeplessness, headaches, nervous instability, worry—are all curable with the fresh air treatment?

Exercise Before Plunge.

Now for the bracer: We'll assume, of course, you have slept with windows open. Don't close it for a minute or two yet. Before you arise stretch your arms above the head, then stretch your legs one at a time until you actually feel them lengthen. Then stretch entire body, so the spinal column will get the benefit. This gets every organ in condition to profit by the intake of oxygen. Then arise; with head up, shoulders back, arms at side, breathe deeply and slowly. Fill your lungs until you feel you cannot take in any more; then let them empty themselves slowly and without force.

Do this from fifteen to twenty times and you will feel the blood circulating from head to toe.

Take your shower or your plunge or your spray in cold or tepid water; follow with a good, vigorous rubdown, and sally forth to the breakfast table and office or other place of duty a happy, smiling creature with a capacity for work and agreeable conversation not experienced in many a day.

The "Kid" Sister's Triumph.

When I was a girl of about 15, tall and awkward, with my hair still in a braid, a handsome man was paying attention to my older sister. He was considered a good catch, being of a good family and having plenty of money. Whenever he came to call on my sister I was given the hint to leave the room.

I was called "the kid sister" and was the subject of many jests and seemingly cruel remarks. I spent many an evening on the back steps crying my eyes out because I was so awkward and homely and my sister was so pretty and was courted by such a handsome man.

Before long war broke out and my sister's beau left with her promise to wait for him. While he pined away with fever in the south, my sister married another man and moved away.

After four years he came back. By this time I had grown prettier, wore long dresses, and did my hair up. I was no longer the little sister. When he came to call he was surprised to think I had changed so. He came often and we soon were in love and were married. R. M. F.

A Nurse's Story.

I was a trained nurse, and was called out on a case just as I got home from a long, hard tussle with typhoid fever. I was tired and cross, but the physician would not take no for an answer, so I told him I would go just for that night, if they would send into the city for a nurse next day.

I was met at the door of my patient's home by a young man, who began at once to make life pleasanter for me. He was my patient's nephew, and had been caring for her alone for a long time, and no doubt was as tired as I was. But he told me if I would just sit in the room, and tell him how to do things, he would do everything that had to be done. I felt ashamed to have him think of such a thing even, and together we went to work to make the patient more comfortable.

She was a large woman, weighing 200 pounds, and was delirious with fever. I weighed just 98, so I could not possibly have taken care of her alone. It was the hardest two weeks I had in my seven years of nursing, but it was also the shortest.

My assistant was kindness personified. In a thousand ways, he made my work easier for me, and as we were constantly together, it was borne upon me more and more that he had a winning personality, and I just could not help admiring him.

His aunt passed away, and I remained in the house until after the funeral, meeting his mother and father for the first time. Much as I had rebelled against coming to the house, it was with regret that I left it that night. He was to take me home. We took a long ride before he left me at my home, and every afternoon for a week he came for me for a wonderful drive in the country. Then one day came a letter from his mother asking me to visit them.

We were married on Christmas day, just six weeks after we had met, and we have had no regrets so far.

FOR A CONSTIPATED CHILD

A small dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will bring quick relief.

MOTHER, when one of the children is constipated are you going to give the first laxative within reach? It is dangerous to do so. Some have been known to rupture the intestines of little children. Don't be beguiled by the outside sugary appearance. Look into the formula. Calomel is seldom necessary; salts, minerals, coal tar, never!

Unlike these, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is admirable for children, as it is for grown people, too. Mothers have been giving it to children for 30 years. They know it does not gripe, and is free from narcotics. The formula is on every package, and you can see it is vegetable, just a combination of Egyptian Senna and other laxative herbs with pepsin. Use it yourself and you will find it is not necessary to take it every day, nor to increase the dose, and that it is pleasant to the taste. Bottles can be had at all drug stores, and the cost is only about a cent a dose. Have no hesitancy giving it to a baby in arms. It is absolutely safe.

Half-Ounce Bottle Free

Few escape constipation, so even if you do not require a laxative at this moment let me send you a Half-ounce Trial Bottle of my Syrup Pepsin FREE OF CHARGE so that you will have it handy when needed. Simply send your name and address to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 514 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Write me today.

BRIGHT SAYINGS of the CHILDREN

The Tribune will pay $1 for each childish saying printed. The story told must never have been printed in any magazine or paper. It is not possible to acknowledge or return unavailable contributions. Write on one side of the paper. Address, bright sayings to Aunty Bee, The Tribune, Chicago.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

Louise was accustomed to attention. One morning there gathered in her mother's parlor, one by one, a number of women for a meeting, and each made much of Louise, who was allowed to play about.

Then the business of the meeting began and Louise was neglected.

Suddenly while serious matters were being discussed, in an interval of silence Louise appeared in the middle of the room and pathetically asked, "Don't anybody want a kiss?"

A. R.

Lucy Parker and Minnie Webb, two naughty little girls, came to spend the day with their cousin, Robert Gray, and teased and tormented him until he passed most of their visit in tears.

That night when he knelt to say his prayers at his mother's knee, he prayed, "O, Lord, bless mamma and papa and all my sisers and brothers, an' ev'ybody 'ceptin' Lucy Parker an' Minnie Vebb."

"That's wrong," corrected his mother. "You must pray for people even if you don't like them. The Bible says you must pray for your enemies."

Robert pondered this for several minutes before he began again.

"O, Lord, bless mamma and papa and all my sisters and brothers, an' ev'body, eben Lucy Parker an' Minnie Vebb."

The family doctor was writing out a prescription for the baby.

"What is the baby's name?" he asked.

"Why, don't you know? You brought her here," said Johnny.

Mary had come over to play with Tom. He was 9, but already she could twist him around her fingers. The children departed for the back yard, but soon came trooping in again.

"Why, children," I said, "I thought you decided to play in the yard today."

"We did," Mary piped up, "but I changed our minds."

Bobby would play with sister's dolls in spite of sister's requests not to do so.

One day he dropped and broke a doll. Sister sobbed as though her heart were broken, and mother scolded Bobby for his carelessness.

"Gee whiz," said Bobby, "all this fuss and I only dropped the thing once."

A neighbor's youngster called Christmas morning to tell us how good Santa Claus had been to him.

Presently, walking up to a canary, the bird greeted him with the usual "beek, beek."

Without the slightest hesitation the child exclaimed, "The same to you."

J. F. W.

A neighbor visiting us asked Dorothy how old she was.

"Three," said the child.

Then the neighbor said: "When are you going to be 4?"

Not knowing the date or month of her birthday Dorothy replied: "Well, as soon as I get through being 3."

You'll Hum 'n' Smell if You See "A Virginia Courtship"

"A VIRGINIA COURTSHIP."

Produced by Realart. Directed by Frank O'Connor. Presented at the State-Lake.

THE CAST.

Prudence Fairfax	May McAvoy
Col. Fairfax	Alec B. Francis
Squire Fenwick	L. M. Wells
Tom	Cassen Ferguson
Constance	Kathlyn Williams
Dwight Neville	Richard Tucker
Buck Lawton	Guy Oliver

By Mae Tinee.

YOU'LL smell honeysuckle and yearn to hum "Away Down South in Dixie" when you see "A Virginia Courtship." It's that kind of a film, sah—ma'am.

One hesitates before saying May McAvoy is the most beautiful of the feminine screen stars. So, remembering there is safety in numbers, one avers whole heartedly that, without a doubt, she is certainly ONE of the loveliest of the ladies who flit across the silver sheet. She has the kind of hair you long to touch, the sort of eyes you like to look into, the sweetest mouth in the world, and—CHARM! OODLES of charm! "Herself" is sure to captivate you whether or not you're strong for the picture in which she's appearing.

MAY McAVOY.
[Hesser Photo.]

Regarding these last, this "Virginia Courtship" isn't long on plot, but it's a nice, chummy little hour's diversion that busies you pleasantly with the affairs of a number of pleasant people. Even the villain is nice—which, of course, he has no business to be. But as impersonated by Richard Tucker he do have a way widdim, and you are quite disconsolate when he gets all mussed up in his encounter with the youthful hero, attractively played by ("attractively"—that sounds funny) Cassen Ferguson.

Away down south in Dixie matters become exceedingly complicated for a most unbusinesslike colonel who has a ward (Miss McAvoy) and who for fifteen drought-y years has been true to a sweetheart (Kathlyn Williams) who in a moment of pique had jilted him and married a "damned northerner."

Repentant and widowed, the lady returns to her ancestral estate next door. Whereat our pretty ward becomes a vurr' busy Miss Fixit, finding herself, as she patches away at the course of true love, getting all mixed up with counterfeiters and everything.

There's a sort of take-me-or-leave-me air about the film that makes you not too critical. You like all the people in the cast too well to worry much about the story. You realize the film is well staged and pretty well subtitled. Also, there is not a doubt but that "A Virginia Courtship" is one of those pictures that the Purity league might, without trailing its skirts in the dust, recommend as "For the Entire Family."

(Whether it would or not is another question. There is mention of mint juleps. Which, of course, might cause the Young Idea to shout: "Pah-pah, what is a mint julep?")

CLOSEUPS

The question of the gentleman at the adjacent desk as to why was it "Griffith's ''Way Down East'" when Griffith only made a picture from somebody else's idea brings a violent protest from a Griffith p. a. Protest:

"One of the most ingratiating features of the vivid identity of THE TRIBUNE is its candor in admitting error. To this quality in your organization I address this comment:

"You ask: 'Why is it called D. W. Griffith's "'Way Down East"?'

"This is the last of many references in your paper that I have seen regarding this same matter.

"Is it not always the custom, and the rightful custom, for any one transferring a thought from one medium to another to identify the new medium with his own producership?

"Have you ever made such comment regarding 'Madama Butterfly'? Do you expect the opera to be billed 'John Luther Long's opera "Madama Butterfly," adapted to music by Puccini'?

"The music loving public knows Puccini. They do not know Long.

"Again, if a painter were to take a poem, as has often been done, and reduce the thought of that poem to a scene, would you expect that painting to be described as by 'Mr. Blank, the poet, transferred to oils and canvas by Mr. Painter'?

"Let us bring forth one other instance of changed form of expression. Earl Derr Biggers wrote a story called 'Seven Keys to Baldpate.' George Cohan transferred it to the medium of the stage. Do you think it would be right to advertise it as 'Earl Derr Biggers' play "Seven Keys to Baldpate,"' and then, in a small underline, 'as adapted to the stage by George Cohan'?

"The fact that a person expresses himself well in words does not mean he has special talent in motion pictures, an entirely different expression. In a film the person who thinks up the idea is only one of many making the picture and not the single, sole creator, as in writing a story.

"I hope you will correct this as a matter of calm justice."

We smilingly suggest that the "gentleman" and the press agent, who is probably also a gentleman, fight it out. Wishcuhwurra!

"Lost and Found" is the title of Jackie Coogan's next picture. Sounds like the plot might be vurr' like that of "My Boy."

JACKIE COOGAN.
[Martin Photo.]

"Schoolday Love" is the next kiddie and animal picture to be produced by Educational. One of the features will, they tell me, be a baseball game played by dogs and monkeys. Ought to be funny if well done—and if the animals in question exhibit no signs of cruel treatment.

Doris May is said to have "no patience with women who believe that matrimony and a career for women do not mix." Evidently an idea or two inside that curl covered noodle. What? Yes?

Colin Campbell, director for Pauline Frederick, was once a laborer in a Chicago packing plant. Then he went "barnstorming." The obvious comment is that he should certainly know all about animals.

Thomas Meighan thinks he's going to have a perfect picture photographically in "The Proxy Daddy" because in it he was shot by two camera men. Both of them, he declares, are "lens wizards."

At a recent dinner given George Ade by the Writers' club of Hollywood he was nominated for President of the United States by the Writers' party. Betchu Mr. Harding's losing sleep!

Not meaning to brag or anything, but Frank Joyner, who did such good work with William Farnum in "Perjury," worked in THE TRIBUNE's proofroom some twenty years ago. George E. Nelis, one of our proofreaders today, is authority for the information. Guess that's proof for you. (Rotten pun! I acknowledge it, so you needn't say anything about it.)

ASK ME! ASK ME!

FLORENCE: Indeed, I will "kindly favor you." Address Wallace Reid, care of Lasky studios, Hollywood, Cal. You're welcome, and will you write again some time, please?

MISS K. M. C.: A picture of Mrs. William S. Hart (Winifred Westover) has appeared in roto. Sorry you didn't see it. We'll repeat for you some day.

ADMIRER: So you like "vurr'." You're a darling. Perfectly platonic and everything, you understand. But so NICE to write such a nice letter.

In Which Three Husky Critics of the Critics Are Criticized

By James Whittaker.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—[Special.]—The openings this week are of book-leaves, the theaters having remained grimly closed, either on whatever was already in them or on vacancy. They are rather unpleasant openings, it having been my luck, and perhaps my duty, to stumble on three separate attacks on the profession of American drama criticism, which, by the grace of God, I follow. I am strenuous when I write "by the grace of God." But this is just by way of taking a strategic position in the face of strenuous assault by George Jean Nathan in his new book, "The Critic and the Drama"; by Walter Pritchard Eaton in his article on the theater in the Freeman of Jan. 11, and by Ernst Boyd in his article on the same subject in the same publication's issue of the following week. They one and all assure me that I am what I am by disgrace of the devil.

GEORGE JEAN NATHAN.

"The reviewers are all known as dramatic critics," writes Eaton, "and would resent any other appellation. Yet one may scan their columns for weeks on end in a vain search for evidence that they merit the higher title."

"Thus the peculiar state of dramatic reviewing in New York is rather the result of mere ignorance than of deliberate corruption," concludes Boyd, at the end of a denunciation of local criticism of Ben-Ami in the defunct "Idle Inn."

And Nathan's book flails: "Criticism in America must follow the bell-cow. The bell-cow is personal cowardice, neighborhood cowardice, or the even cheaper cowardice of the daily and—to a much lesser degree—periodical press."

One Knout That Doesn't Dent the Hide.

As for Nathan, it is not new nor very painful to be knouted by his prose. He has been a vendor of criticism of the critics for many years. His lashings fall periodically and always in the same spot on the critic's neck, hurting it not so much now as they once did because there where he strikes is hide calloused by him and as tough as his toughest abuse.

But Eaton and Boyd are new foes. It is their arrival on the scene which makes it a scene of battle. Three is a crowd.

First of all, the rancors of Nathan, Eaton, and Boyd, I think, rise in a misunderstanding—their misunderstanding of the status of newspaper criticism.

Eaton says, "The reviewers are all known as dramatic critics, and would resent any other appellation," and is wrong. It is Eaton who assumes that we are dramatic critics. In our offices it is assumed that we are drama reporters. We go out and bring back the story of what happened in a theater. And one of the things that happened was that, for reasons, we liked or did not like the play. Eaton (and Boyd and Nathan, too) supposed that we took our critical faculties with us into the playhouse, probably in a tube in our vest pockets, like the ink in our fountain pens.

It is Boyd who obligingly quotes the old saw about "checking the critical faculty with the hats in the cloakroom," and thereby exposes the most blundering and most common misunderstanding of the newspaper reviewer's mind. None of us could "check his critical faculty in the cloakroom" for the simple reason that it does not exist, like a hat, as a traveling part of equipment. One goes into the playhouse without it and presently it is born. It had no existence before the curtain rose. It was suddenly created out of nothing and its generation was in the mingling of the two lights which went up, one in the footlights, the other in our brains, as the play began.

The second step in refutation of Nathan, Eaton, and Boyd is demonstration of what must be the differences between newspaper and all other reviewing, between rapid daily and leisurely weekly or monthly judgment of the arts.

The leisurely critic advises his reader to see or not to see the play. The tacit assumption underlying all newspaper criticism is that the reader is going to see the play. He is going to see it, good or bad. The institution of newspaper dramatic reviewing is based entirely on this fact. The editors of newspapers put in their columns things which are going to interest majorities of readers. There are majorities who are interested in murders, majorities interested in fat reduction, and a majority interested in plays. To this majority every drama review, even the "unfavorable" one, is advice to see the play.

How Shall One Ignore the Bad Plays?

Eaton bewails the fact that the drama reviewers review all the bad plays as well as all the good ones, and quotes Anatole France's "Criticism is the Adventure of a Soul Among Masterpieces" to support his contention that the daily reviews will continue to be "worthless and a weariness to the flesh" until the "so-called critics are relieved of the intolerable burden of petty reviewing."

"The critic's soul," he believes, "cannot adventure among works of this type, aye, though we send Anatole France himself to the playhouse."

How does Eaton propose that we restrict our adventures among the masterpieces? Shall we send out dependable scouts to present reports to us on the mastery of current offerings on Broadway and see them only if and when the reports are of a chef d'oeuvre? Eaton is not writing in terms of professional journalism, which is real adventuring. I am not sure that the taking of my unsuspecting soul into the first audience to Avery Hopwood's "The Demi-Virgin" was not its biggest, though certainly not its finest, adventure of this season. It came out of the Playhouse quaking, but a soul in good condition should stand, should even be asked to stand, some adverse adventures.

MISS CLARE KUMMER.
[White Photo.]

It is the newspaper reviewer's job, but it is also his desire, to see the bad plays with the good.

Bad plays, when you come to think of it, are not half bad. There is one bad play on Broadway now which is one of my best adventures of the year. It is Clare Kummer's "The Mountain Man." Here is one of the worst plays of a decade written by one of the best playwrights of the decade. It would have been a fine experience to enter the Maxine Elliott theater a few weeks back to discover that Clare Kummer had written another "Good Gracious, Anabelle." But it was a startling experience to enter and discover that she had written as badly as if she were not Clare Kummer. When I saw that "The Mountain Man" was turning out to be so amateur a piece of dramatic writing that Miss Kummer had been obliged to carve five doors into her scenery to get her shuffling characters on and off her uneventful stage, I felt that here was news—daily news—as much more worthy of immediate daily report than another Kummer success as the bankruptcy of Morgan would be bigger news than his earning of another million.

The report in the paper I serve the next morning was "unfavorable." At the same time it was tacitly an urge to the reader to hasten to the Maxine Elliott to see Clare Kummer's bad play. There is the whole philosophy of newspaper reviewing in one incident. The newspaper reviewer will not take Eaton's advice not to see bad plays nor will be advise others not to see bad plays.

Mr. Nathan Lays About Him.

Boyd is more easily answered than Eaton, for he follows a custom among critics of the press and all things pertaining thereto and tells some things that are not true. His thesis is that a roaring ignorant mob of first nighters, including a goodly per cent of press men, conspired on the occasion of the premiere of Ben-Ami in "The Idle Inn" to make a success of the season's flattest failure. He noted that the house was a well trained claque. If I remember rightly, it was, and I was a bit uncomfortable, squeezed into a row of Mr. Ben-Ami's admiring and perspiring friends and countrymen. Then, claims Boyd, the press turned unpaid praise agent the following morning and made a unanimous, specious laud of this specious, unlaudable opening. It did nothing such. Boyd had a grand case—if it had been provable. There is probably nothing base in Boyd's misrepresentations of what actually happened. "The Idle Inn" got no mercy in the dailies and Mr. Ben-Ami's carefully constructed popularity in "Samson and Delilah" was almost ruined in one morning of news reading. But Boyd's error is understandable. It is strangely difficult to report accurately. You try to stick to the facts and the facts won't stick to you.

There are 112 pages in Nathan's new book (for which Knopf charges less than the seat price to some plays that are not half so entertaining) which are not diatribe against the evil newspaper drama critic. Somehow, in reading it, however, I get the impression that these are 112 pages of preface. They carefully construct Nathan's philosophy of criticism, and then carelessly empty the whole weight of it onto the news critic's head. The glee with which Nathan rushes into the final chapters, headed "Dramatic Criticism" and "Dramatic Criticism in America," indicates that this is where his fun began. I'll wager he wrote them first.

"Unctuous Laissez Faire."

The most terse statement contained therein of Nathan's opinion of us is condensed into one paragraph later in the volume:

"The ruling ethic of the American press so far as the theater is con-

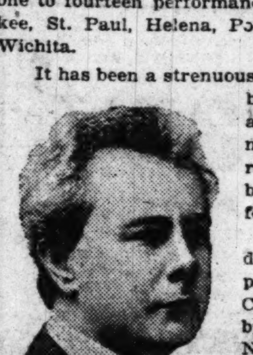
Chicago Opera Completes Its Stay Here and Moves On to New Fields

By Edward Moore.

BY the time these words are printed, the Chicago Opera association will have departed for New York, the first step on a post-season of thirteen weeks outside of its home town. Five weeks will be spent in the community on the Hudson, eight more distributed in engagements of from one to fourteen performances in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Helena, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, and Wichita.

It has been a strenuous, at times hectic, season, and not the less interesting because from now on the attendants upon musical affairs will be obliged to adjust themselves to the milder and less electric atmosphere of concerts and recitals. There will be some exceedingly good music between now and the end of spring. It is just different, that is all.



JOSEF HOFMANN.
[Mishkin Photo.]

One reads of the approach within the next few days of Josef Hofmann, one of the best of the interpreters of music of the old school, as soloist with the Chicago Symphony orchestra; of recital appearances by Magdeleine Du Carp, another good pianist; by Nina Koshetz, a Russian soprano whose vocal virtues were somewhat eclipsed by a too crowded season at the Auditorium; by Irma Roubleff, a pianist and composer, new here; of a concert by the Civic Music association; of this and that and the other in the world of melody.

During the season just closed Miss Garden's songbirds made their appearances in twenty-five different operas, a few of them with casts so varied they were almost like new performances. Considering that the wheels of progress slowed up considerably for some two weeks in midseason while Miss Garden was fighting off an attack of illness, it is no mean record. Giorgio Polacco, the company's leading conductor, expresses his belief that no other opera company in the world could have equaled it in the same time.

Eleven of the works on the list belonged to the Italian wing; ten were French; one, "The Love for Three Oranges," was Russian; and three were German. Of the last, two, "Tannhäuser" and "Tristan and Isolde," are in the Wagnerian group; "Salome," though sung to the French text by Oscar Wilde, is German because its music is by Richard Strauss.

Probably no more in the German list could have been done, yet there is a bit of disappointment that several early plans fell by the wayside. Rôles were assigned for "Die Meistersinger," but it was not given. "Lohengrin" and "Die Walküre," sung in most respects uncommonly well in English last season were not renewed. Vague talk last summer about a Mozart season remained merely vague talk.

NINA KOSHETZ.
[Moffett Photo.]

It is not always the simplest matter in the world to cast a Wegner opera, to find singers with sufficient dramatic force and yet with the voices to reproduce the lovely, golden, legato melodic line that is Wagner at his best. It is a fairly well authenticated matter of history that Wagner's ideals of singing when he was composing his operas were the ideals of the Italian operatic stage.

At the same time the vast resources of the Chicago Opera have been able to uncover good Wagnerian singers, if not in all cases to use them. In the light of the last two seasons, the best Wagnerian singers, those who came nearest to the principles laid down by Mr. Polacco when he conducts the operas, by Mr. Stock when the Chicago Symphony orchestra plays its many Wagnerian concert excerpts, have been Rosa Raisa, Dorothy Francis, now no longer with the company; Cyrena Van Gordon, Edward Johnson, Riccardo Martin, Georges Baklanoff, Joseph Schwarz, Desiré Defrere, Edouard Cotreuil, and James Wolf.

Deciphering Ancient Scores.

From the other side of the ocean, in the European edition of THE TRIBUNE, comes an item about some of the oldest recorded music. If it is true, it is bound to add considerably to knowledge of ancient melody.

Raoul Gunsbourg of Paris and Monte Carlo claims to have solved the secret of deciphering the musical code of the songs of Solomon. He is well known in European musical affairs. Part of the time he is a composer, with several operas to his credit—his one act "Le Vieil Aigle" has been sung several times at the Auditorium. The rest of the time he is general director of the opera company at Monte Carlo.

So many references to music exist in the Bible that it is evident the Jews of old had an elaborate musical system. M. Gunsbourg has been working on the problem since 1893, he says. He finally solved it in the Kovno Bible, which dates from the tenth century before the Christian era. It was written on parchment, was kept in the synagogue of Kovno, Russia, became one of the spoils of the recent war, and was returned under the peace treaty.

M. Gunsbourg found that the secret of the musical characters lay in combinations of dots placed directly above the text of the songs. No staff was employed, but there were bars, much like those of modern music, also marks indicating rhythm and expression. The line of the text was labeled "Dvouri" (words) and the line of musical characters "Chir" (music). He found there were seven notes, corresponding to the seven notes of the modern scale, and three chromatic alterations.

With this key as a basis, M. Gunsbourg transcribed several of the songs and is now at work on others. European musicians to whom he has shown them say they have remarkable charm.

From Old to New in Music.

Making a wide and rapid leap from the most ancient to the most modern of musical manifestations, there comes an echo of the song recital given the other night by Eva Gauthier, a young singer who by virtue of her own enthusiasm and persona, and artistic charm is by far the most persuasive of the missionaries of modernism.

Some of the texts in Miss Gauthier's list of songs were quite as interesting, quite as propulsive as the songs themselves. Here is the translation of one of them, to which Darius Milhaud set notes. The poem is called "La Limousine." It is by René Chalput, from the set called "Soirées de Pétrograde."

"In a snowstorm a Rolls-Royce stops at the wharf. Ah! The strange and heavy parcel which they hide under their cloaks. To the sound of the hundreds of boat bells on the Neva, and whilst the matins are ringing, the very holy monk Rasputin, now very obedient, is on the road to destiny."

Superficially this is not much more than a few lines out of a daily paper's news items. You might say it is nothing but a crime story with a little different angle. But it has color, sound, and what is sometimes known in our set as the punch.

MAGDELEINE DU CARP.
[Underwood & Underwood.]

Now just what has been done by Chalput with his words is being done by small but industrious groups in England, France, Germany, and the United States with music. Belonging to this side of the water are John Alden Carpenter, Eric DeLamarter, Leo Sowerby, now in Rome, and was, until his untimely death two years ago, Charles T. Griffes.

These people, on both sides of the ocean, are working along the same line, using different methods, achieving different results, but with a common bond. They have absorbed about all there is to know of the ancient music, then have laid it aside, and are looking around them for what is in life today. Mr. Carpenter writes music for a pantomime ballet with a strip of comic cartoons for a subject and with the lowly and contemned jazz for part of his material. The test, the only test, is that he made interesting and good music out of it.

It would be easy enough to take the wrong attitude on this, to dismiss all old music because it is old. This is the attitude of pose, of bluff. There has been too much of it already. The cause of music is by no means helped by it.

The composers mentioned above happen to be big enough to be able to lay aside the precepts of their elders. They are impelled less by a desire to tear down the good old music than by a desire to write good new music. One of the gratifying features of Miss Gauthier's recital was that she had been able to select so little bluff and so much music.

The Teenie Weenies and Folk Songs.

Those who delight in Mr. Donahey's pictured stories of the Teenie Weenies in the Sunday edition of THE TRIBUNE will be glad to know that they, too, have gone into music. Marx E. Oberndorfer, Chicago pianist and composer, has put out "The Teenie Weenie Music Book." It is published by J. Fischer & Bro., New York.

Mr. Oberndorfer has intended his pieces for the younger generation of pianists and has carried out his intention well. Technically they are quite

A New Barrie, and a Cryptic Philosophy

By Sheppard Butler.

A CURIOUS play, "Mary Rose." On the day after it came to Chicago I met a representative of the Frohman interests, with a gleam in his eye.

"You," he said, "are the second American newspaper man to admit that he doesn't know what Barrie is driving at."

"Mary Rose" has been performed in many cities and reviewed many times since it was first brought to these shores. If only two of us have failed to grasp its meaning, it is, no doubt, a sad betrayal of our lack of acumen.

MISS MARGUERITE LAMAR
in "The Rose Girl," at the La Salle.
[Apeda Photo.]

Still, we are not entirely alone in our puzzlement. I am told that, when the play was being prepared for its American performances, Miss Ruth Chatterton, having the task of portraying its title rôle, felt the urge to know something of what it was all about. So she asked Sir James himself what Mary Rose's strange adventure is intended to signify.

"Well," said the dramatist, "I haven't quite made up my mind."

An equivocal answer, perhaps. But if Miss Chatterton does not know and Barrie will not tell—and if, as happens to be the case, there has been a lively controversy on the subject in England—what is a bewildered Chicago onlooker to do?

Of course, it is conceivable that "Mary Rose" has no hidden meaning. Coleridge meant nothing in "Kubla Khan," as any teacher of English literature will tell you, and the attempt to find a stately symbolism in the erotic beauties of the "Song of Songs" is, I believe, regarded as one of the classic absurdities of scholasticism. Much sheer loveliness has been smudged by blundering efforts at interpretation.

Is "Mary Rose," then, merely a fairy tale? I doubt it. It was written in England in the days after the war, when thoughts of the departed and their possible return were in every one's mind. It tells an eerie story of one who vanished from the earth and came back, unchanged, after twenty-five years. It must have meant something to its English audiences. And viewing it now at the Illinois—whether or not you like it as a play—you will find in its haunting overtones a fascinating invitation to conjecture.

Fantasy, Terror, and Cold Disillusionment.

This is not the playful and tender Barrie of "Peter Pan," nor the sly and whimsical Barrie of "What Every Woman Knows," nor yet even the mystical Barrie of "A Well Remembered Voice." If you remember this last appealing fragment, acted by George Arliss at the Blackstone, you recall that it told of a father sorrowing for his son, killed in the war, and how the boy came back to him one night. Only his voice was there, but it was a resounding and confident voice, joking blithely of this and that and bringing a smile to the old man's face. Altogether a joyous and reassuring play.

"Mary Rose," on the other hand, is sinister. Here is a young mother under the spell of the Island that Likes to Be Visited—a forbidding spot for all its inviting title, since, they say, it is a place where the birds never alight. Mary Rose goes there for a picnic, and hears the "call." Says Barrie in his stage directions:

SIR HARRY LAUDER
at the Great Northern.
[Locke Clute Photo.]

"It is mysterious and threatening and rapidly increases in volume till it is horribly loud. It is furtive, fearsome, seductive, but beneath it there is lovely music, as if there were something very beautiful about the 'call' which is trying to assert itself, but is largely drowned in the other more eerie sounds. Mary Rose is not frightened, but neither is there joy in her face. When the storm is at its loudest she passes through the brushwood out of sight. Then the 'call' dies away. The island has got her."

For all its fantasy there is chill terror in this scene as Miss Chatterton plays it. And there is cold disillusionment in that other scene wherein Mary Rose, after twenty-five years, returns to her father, mother, and husband. She is still young, but the years have aged the others. They have adjusted themselves, become reconciled to her loss. She is bewildered and they are vaguely unhappy. Her father voices what the rest will not say: "Do you think she should have come back?"

She seeks her baby—a man now, and a soldier of fortune in some far place. She cannot understand; her lingering youth is a curse, setting her apart. Presently she dies.

A new Barrie, indeed. What somber imaginings are these from the man who wrote "The Little Minister"? What do they mean? That the departed are best forgotten, and that the backward look brings only more sorrow? Perhaps.

"Richelieu" Still Chipper as Eighty-third Birthday Approaches.

Much beguiling lore of the theater clings to the flamboyant old play "Richelieu," with which Mr. Mantell and his company begin their engagement at the Olympic this evening.

ROBERT B. MANTELL
in "Richelieu," at the Olympic.
[White Photo.]

Bulwer-Lytton, the novelist, wrote it for William Charles Macready, the actor, in 1839, when both were at the height of their fame. The former's "Last Days of Pompeii" had appeared in 1834, and his "Rienzi" in 1835. Finding himself popular and prosperous, he turned his attention to play writing, and in 1836 there was produced "The Duchess de la Vallière," in which Macready appeared as the Marquis de Bragelonne. This was a prompt failure.

In 1837 Macready took the old Covent Garden theater for his first venture in London management, and he soon asked Bulwer-Lytton to write him another play, following out certain suggestions of his own. The result was "The Lady of Lyons," written in two weeks and as hurriedly produced. It proved a great success.

Then came "Richelieu; or, The Conspiracy." Macready wanted a play as good as "The Lady of Lyons." Bulwer-Lytton approached the task, as he did most of his writing, by browsing through history in search of a promising character or period. He found them both in the career of the cardinal and minister of state to Louis XIII. "Richelieu" was quickly put together and submitted to Macready, who, with his flair for the theatrical, pounced at once upon a single incident and demanded that it be built up into the "big scene" of the play. Together dramatist and actor evolved the episode wherein the cardinal speaks the famous lines beginning—

Around her form I draw the magic circle of the church.

Macready produced "Richelieu" in London in March, 1839. As one chronicler puts it, the play "took the town by storm, being acted thirty-seven times." That, needless to say, was before the day of three year runs. In September of the same year Edwin Forrest acted the piece at Wallack's theater in New York, and it has been almost continuously in performance ever since. It is not a great play in any literary sense, but it is "good theater," and few dramas, aside from those of Shakespeare, have remained so persistently and so long on the English speaking stage.

News and Views (Mostly News) About the Stage and Its People.

"Midnight Rounders," the entertainment which kept Eddie Cantor hereabouts for many weeks, has been abandoned as a full fledged show, but it will live on. It is being divided into two parts, each of them to serve as a "unit" in Shubert vaudeville. Meanwhile, rehearsals are beginning for a new production to be headed by the ebullient Cantor. Forty chorus girls are required, and an announcement to this effect in New York the other day is reported to have brought more than 2,000 applicants. These are not prosperous days for the players.

Overnight, and by another's misfortune, Miss Helen Menken has abruptly achieved the heights of stardom. She accepted the task of succeeding Miss Alice Brady in "Drifting," the new melodrama of China from which Miss Brady was forced to withdraw because of illness, and, when she gave her first performance last week, found her name in the electric lights with that of Robert Warwick, the hero of the proceedings. You will remember her as pleasantly among those present in "Three Wise Fools," acted not so long ago at Powers'.

Bad news. Chicago is not, after all, to see Harold Bell Wright's first play, "The Salt of the Earth." It closed last night in St. Louis. Mr. Belasco's production of "The Wandering Jew" is another casualty of the moment, having ended its career in Boston.

"St. Ursula," by Zoe Akins and Edward Sheldon, may be staged soon, they say, with Miss Emily Stevens as its star. Two other plays by the prolific Miss Akins await production—"Greatness," with a stellar rôle created for Miss Jobyna Howland, now of "The Gold Diggers," and something called "Rings and Chains," designed for a male star.

When "The Rose Girl" had its first performances in New York last season its cast included Charles Purcell, Lydia Lopokova, Marjorie Gateson, May Boley, Stewart Baird, Zoe Barnett, and Mabel Withee. None of these will be present at the La Salle this evening. Their successors are said to be very good, but the playgoer who insists on "original casts" will not find one in this instance.

Sir Harry Lauder, coming to the Great Northern tomorrow, will submit two new songs—"I Know a Lassie Out in Ohio" and "O'er the Hill ta Ardentiny." Many old ones are still in his repertory, among them "The Saftest o' th' Family," "When I Was Twenty-one," "There Is Somebody Waiting for Me," "I Love a Lassie," and "She's Ma Daisy."

A company of seventy has been brought from London by Albert de Courville to perform his revue, "Pins and Needles," which will be revealed in New York this week. Among the players are Ethel Kelly Gould and Harry Pilcer, who has been rarely in this country since he won fame in France as dancing partner of the late Mlle. Gaby Deslys.

Miss Charlotte Greenwood does not like her new entertainment, "Let 'Er Go Letty," and is transferring her presence to a musical version of Charles Klein's play, "Maggie Pepper," in which Miss Rose Stahl used to act. Meanwhile, Oliver Morosco is looking for some one else to appear in the "Letty" piece.

Cosmo Hamilton, it is said, is preparing a dramatic version of the popular Hutchinson novel, "If Winter Comes."

The versatile stock company at the Victoria theater, on the north side, will have a whirl at musical comedy this week, presenting "Linger Longer Letty," with a prima donna, a tenor, and a chorus of ten. Not many groups of players in repertory are so resourceful.

A. E. Thomas is at work on a new play, in which Henry Miller and Miss Blanche Bates will continue their partnership as stars next season.

Mme. Borgny Hammer, a Norwegian actress of high repute in her own country, will appear at Mandel hall, the University of Chicago, on Wednesday evening, presenting Ibsen's "Ghosts," under the auspices of the university settlement board. Her company includes Rolf Fjell, formerly of the Central theater of Christiania, and Joseph Stanhope, until recently one of the players in "Abraham Lincoln."

Fawcett; Alice Sanderson, Nancy Deaver; her father, D. J. Flanagan; Geoffrey Small, Huntley Gordon. Y'wekkum.

T. J. W.: Beads! Beads! Beads! ? ? ?

BASHFUL: You ARE not!

MURIEL: O, I know whom you mean! Francis McDonald. Address? Glidden hotel, Hollywood, Cal. It's awfully too bad you're so lonesome. How come? And could somebody help—or write you a personal letter or something? (Meaning us?)

CONNIE B.: You don't have half as much fun writing to me as I do answering you. OF COURSE Rudolph should answer your letters! He's 27 years old. Been married and on the verge of wedding soon again, I hear. No bother. The contrary.

A BET: Yes, Mary Garden has appeared in the movies. Not to speak of, but she HAS appeared. Do you win or lose?

JOE S.: I got you but I do NOT understand you. Your reference to the ball and the starving artist is cryptic not to say wockish. Try again. So will I. Maybe sometime we'll get together.

GAYLORD D.: You're about the busiest man I ever heard of! Movies, insurance, and everything! And you seem to like so well doing the things you do. Well, keeping busy and enjoying one's work is the surest way on earth of staying young. Good luck to you. [You stop knocking what you did knock! I think it's swell now.]

A Critic Rises to Criticize Three Critic Critics

cerned is one of unctuous laissez faire. 'If you can't praise, don't dispraise,' is the editorial injunction to the reviewer. The theater in America is a great business—greater even than the department store—and a great business should be treated with proper respect. What if the reviewer does not admire 'The Key to Heaven'? It played to more than $12,000 last week; it must be good. The theater must be helped, and the way to help it is uninterruptedly to speak well of it. Fine drama? Art? A newspaper has no concern with the drama and art; the public is not interested in such things. A newspaper's concern is primarily with news. But is not dramatic swindling, the selling of spurious wares at a high price, news? Is not an attempt to corrupt the future of the theater as an honorable institution and an honorable business also news, news not so much less interesting, perhaps, than the three column account of an ex-Follies girl's adulteries?"

Here is Nathan's opinion conveniently capsuled into a bit of melodrama, in which you can imagine the uncombed managing editor shaking his tousled red hair as he roars at a model, horn specked drama critic, unhappily mute as he thinks of the pay roll and the five little hungry ones at home.

I cannot help thinking that Nathan, who edits something himself, knows better than he writes. Editors no longer say, "If you can't praise, don't dispraise." Perhaps they did once. I don't know. I am a young man. Nathan is an older one.

MUSIC AND THE MUSICIANS

fairly simple, which makes them good for youthful fingers, but they also have agreeable melody for the sake of youthful hearts, and some fairly tricky bits of rhythm, of advantage to youthful brains.

Along with the Teenie Weenie book came the same publishing firm's recent contribution to folk music, with Murray-Davey's "Ancient Basque Folk Songs" and Deems Taylor's "Traditional Airs" prominently featured. They are a valuable addition to the lore of folk music. To the best of my knowledge none of the numbers are contained in other collections.

Rehearsals for next spring's music festival at Evanston are to begin next week. Word is relayed that the chorus as at present constituted is in need of male voices. Applications for membership in the choral body may be made to Peter C. Lutkin, musical director, Music hall, Evanston. The works to be sung will include Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Elgar's "Caractacus," Goring-Thomas' "Swan and Skylark," and a new short work by Percy Grainger called "The Bride's Tragedy."

The movies, continuing their raid on the other arts, have captured Arthur Dunham, who goes this week to the Tivoli theater to conduct the orchestra in what is named as a long term. Mr. Dunham was last year the conductor of the Boston English Opera company and has been for ten years the musical director of the Association of Commerce Glee club and the Lyric Glee club of Milwaukee. He was the founder of the Philharmonic orchestra of Chicago and its conductor during its lifetime.

Cathal O'Byrne, lyric tenor and an authority on the song lore of Ireland, will, together with Charlotte Silverson Foreman, pianist, present a program for the benefit of Our Lady of Peace church at the Illinois theater this afternoon. The Rev. Edward Rice, the pastor of the church, was an overseas chaplain who went through the thick of the war. Mr. O'Byrne will sing to the accompaniment of an Irish bardic harp played by Cecilia M. Young.

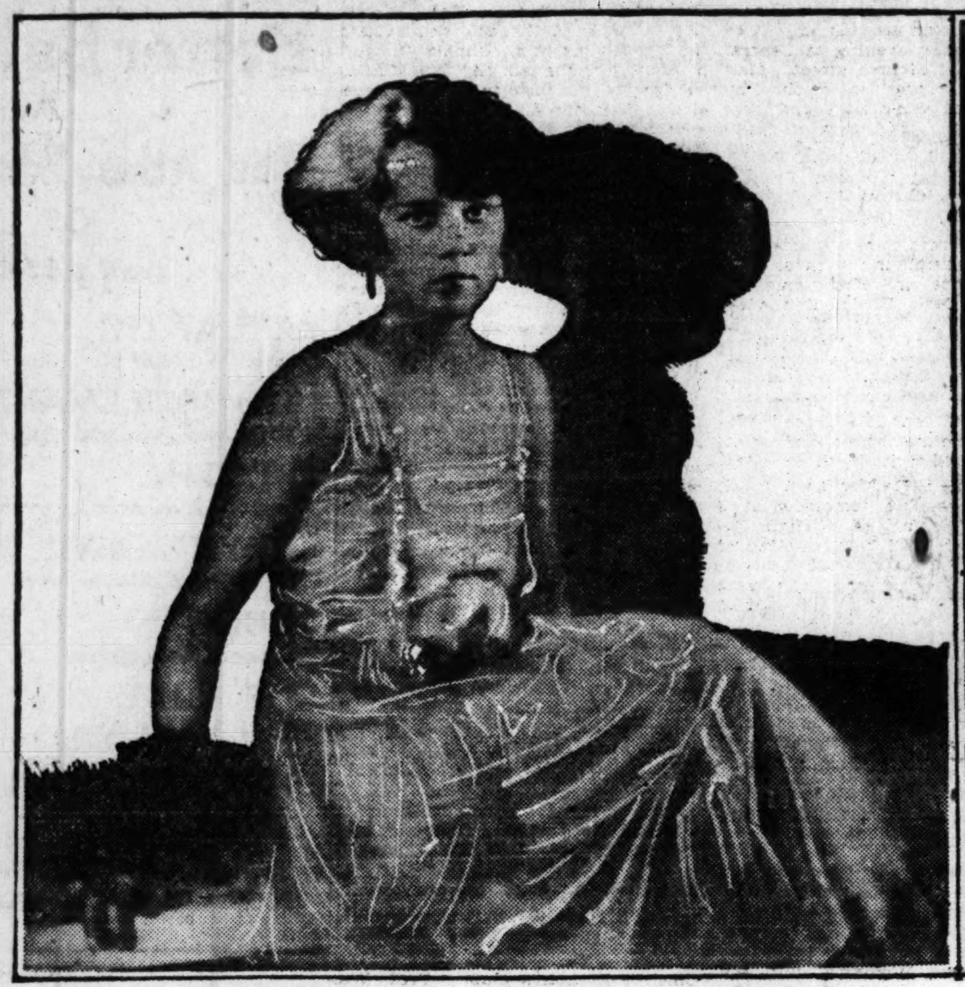
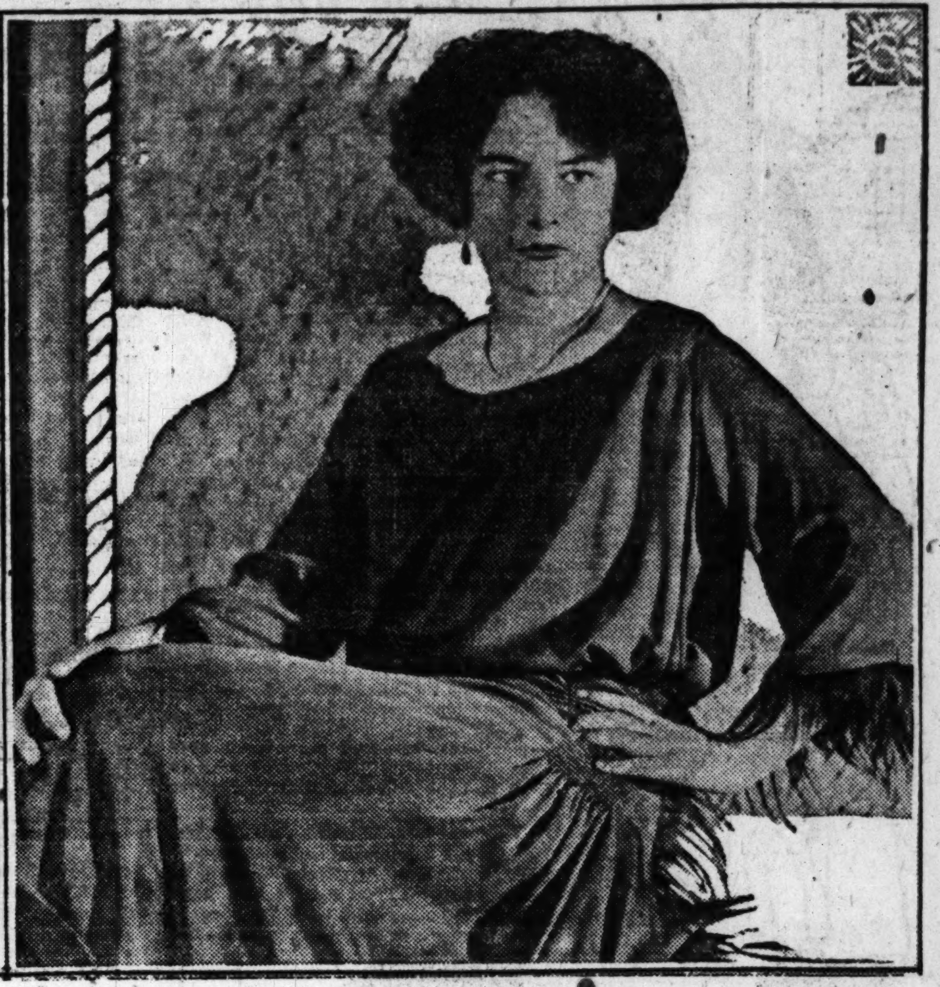
NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY



MISS JANE VAN DOREN WRIGHT.
[Raymor Photo.]



MISS LEE HIGGINSON.
[Raymor Photo.]

Miss Lee Higginson, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Higginson Jr. of 1322 Astor street, made her debut at a dance at the Casino Nov. 26. Miss Jane Van Doren Wright, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willian Van Doren Wright of 76 East Elm street, was presented formally to society at a reception on Nov. 12. Mr. and Mrs. Wright gave a dance for their daughter on Dec. 22 at the Casino. Many parties have been given for both young girls, who are among the most popular "debs" of the season.

Miss Higginson and her elder sister, Miss Theresa Higginson, who made her debut last winter, are planning to go east for a visit in March, going to the Virginia Hot Springs for a fortnight before returning home. They spent last summer abroad and expect to return there for the early summer this year. They returned recently from Lenox, Mass., where they spent Christmas with their parents.

Miss Wright is going to Daytona, Fla., Feb. 1 for the balance of the winter.

Altogether, Now! Let's Justify Our Motto, "I Will"

By Mme. X.

THE question of the hour, the question which must be answered in a few weeks, the question which must be answered in the affirmative by the people of this community is, Does Chicago want to keep grand opera?

If it be not answered in the affirmative, our city will slip back into the provincial condition from which it emerged ten years ago, when, through the generosity of a branch of one of the great families, not only of Chicago but of this country, grand opera was established on such a scale here that it soon took foremost place among the grand operas of the world.

For ten years we have enjoyed this highly developed form of music with increasing appreciation and intelligence. Our audiences have become both larger and more understanding. They have learned much of the nature and quality of grand opera, and have become dependent on it for mental and emotional stimulus and inspiration. To lose it now would be such a blow to the cultural life of the city as we have never yet experienced. It would be the first, the only setback in the remarkable union of spiritual and material growth which is Chicago. To lose it would be unthinkable, but not impossible. To lose it would be such a reflection on us and our intelligence and public spirit that it would take years to remove the stigma.

We would place ourselves in the position of a people willing to receive as charity what we do not want to pay for, a rather pitiable aspect for a decent burg like ours and one which it is impossible to attribute, even for a moment, to the city which gave birth to the most beautiful expression of the thought and vision of man which the world has ever seen, the World's Columbian exposition.

Millions Have Been Spent.

The campaign is now on to raise a sufficient guarantee fund to enable the recently born Civic Opera company to take over and operate successfully the enterprise which has become such a fundamental part of our civic life. The company passing out of existence, which has been supported by a private generosity exceeding that of any royalty on record (not excluding that of the mad Ludwig of Bavaria), is ready to hand over to the newly formed organization all its tangible assets, including scenery and costumes, on which millions of dollars have been spent, and this without any charge Also it turns over the nucleus of a combination of great artists of world-wide fame and a trained orchestra of ten years' experience in playing together; and an orchestra, like wine, ripens and improves with age beyond the appreciation of the uninitiated.

Chicago has always been fortunate in the caliber of her leading citizens, and never more so than in the case of the Chicago grand opera. The future of this enterprise passes from the hands of Harold F. McCormick, who up to this year has been a predominating force in it, into those of Samuel Insull, a man whose service to the city, both as head of two of our greatest public service corporations and as chairman of the State Council of National Defense, has earned him an enviable place in the general esteem. His ability is only equaled by his sense of duty.

Asks Wide Support.

That the latter is strong is evidenced by the fact that he has undertaken the immense and thankless task of raising for the opera a $500,000 annual fund to cover any possible deficit. He has also taken the chairmanship of a finance committee which he has committed to the task of keeping the deficit down to $350,000 in the beginning of the five years to which the guarantors bind themselves, and to lower this from year to year. Hitherto, when Mr. Insull has started out to accomplish anything, he has made good. What is your guess as to this his latest undertaking?

He is one of the few among the city's financially important men who really care for opera. He was an opera fan when opera first started in Chicago in the old days of the Auditorium's beginning, in the early '90s, those days when Adelina Patti, just past her prime, but still singing as no one has sung since, filled the as yet uncompleted hall with the exquisite cascades of her high notes. He was the only season seatholder at that time, though he was at the beginning of his business career here, when dollars and cents meant more than they do now to the president of the Peoples Gas and Commonwealth Edison companies.

He is calling on the entire community to come to support of the Civic Opera company. First to be brought into his drive were the employés of the two great corporations which he runs. He summoned them to his aid, and told them that the credit of himself and these two organizations depended on a successful outcome of this drive and that they were as much in it as he was, that they therefore must go out to the people of Chicago with whom their employment brought them in contact, and put the matter up to them.

Postpones Pleasure Trip.

To make this possible, the original plan of getting 500 guarantors at $1,000 apiece has been abandoned in favor of securing an unrestricted number, each one promising such support as his or her means will allow, from an annual $10 up to many thousands.

He is also organizing many committees among various groups in Chicago. One of these is drawn from the women members of the Friends of Opera. It is headed by Mrs. Jacob Baur, who made such a remarkable record in the drive for opera guarantors which she conducted last May and June.

It is in place to say here that unselfish public spirit is by no means confined to the men of the community. For years Mrs. Baur has planned going this winter to Palm Beach. She is a woman of affairs, and has since the death of her husband been at the head of the large business he left, so this plan was something which had to be arranged long ahead. She has now given this up in order to devote herself to this opera guarantee fund drive. Many social leaders have undertaken and carried to success altruistic enterprises, but few have given up for these undertakings any such long cherished designs for pleasure and recreation.

We Can and Must Do Better.

Perhaps Chicagoans would not feel as if so much were being asked of them if they knew what other smaller places guarantee to our company when it goes on tour, spreading, as it does, the name and fame of Chicago abroad in the land. The tour of the company, outside of the New York engagement, includes Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Helena, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, and Wichita, and is based on a guarantee from these various cities amounting to $719,500 for the season. The season runs from Feb. 27 to April 22, and is operated at a profit. Think of that!

Philadelphia guarantees $100,000 for seven performances, San Francisco, $200,000 for fourteen. Chicago is asked to put up $500,000 from sixty-eight to seventy performances.

If a place like Helena is willing to guarantee $14,500 for one performance and Wichita puts up $28,500 for two, it is not asking too much of Chicago, the home of the company, the community which gets the credit for the supreme quality of the organization, adequately to guarantee its ten weeks' season. The receipts for this seven weeks' tour will exceed the total receipts of Chicago's ten weeks. Is that to our credit?

As Mr. Insull, himself, puts it: "Apparently the place where we have to popularize Chicago grand opera is in Chicago."

Eliminating Weak Spots.

The expenditures of the company will be for the first time in the history of the organization entirely in the hands of the finance committee, of which Mr. Insull is chairman. No one in the company is empowered to make any kind of contract that does not have the o. k. of this committee. This has heretofore been the weak spot in the enterprise. Perfectly responsible agents, possessing the power of spending the resources of the company with no checks on their expenditures, have, as a rule, lost their heads and plunged the enterprise into extraordinary extravagances. This phase of opera running is now ended which insures business like methods in the conduct of the business of opera.

If Chicago does not rise to this call to its better self it will be because long acceptance of a great gift has so weakened its fibre that it is in the position of many other recipients of charity, unable to stand on its own feet. This idea of our western metropolis is beyond the imagination of even the most pessimistic of us. So, with a long pull and a strong pull and a pull all together, let's put the opera through with a rush and justify our motto, "I will."

Social and Artistic.

A by-product of the opera was the extremely successful concert given by some of the opera stars last Sunday night at the Auditorium under the special direction of Miss Muriel McCormick and the auspices of the Illinois Children's Home and Aid society. It was a brilliant occasion whether looked at from an artistic or social point of view. Mme. Galli Curci, Mme. Cyrena Van Gordon, Lucien Muratore, Tonio Schipa, Serge Prokofieff, John Carpenter, the Russian dancers, Ukrainski and Pavley and their corps de ballet, all combined to give a really wonderful evening. The artists were most generous answering repeated encores until the evening stretched on toward midnight.

About $15,000 was raised, of which half went to the three French charities and the rest to the Chicago one already mentioned.

Mrs. R. T. Crane and Harold McCormick made it possible to turn over every cent taken in to the charities in question by defraying the inevitable expenses of the concert. The artists all gave their services with an eager desire to help which made the work of the organizing committee pleasant and easy.

Seem to Be Tireless.

The ending of the opera engagement here marks the approaching close of our social season. Some more dancing is, however, ahead of the dancing world. Next Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. Honoré Palmer and their debutante cousin, Miss Bertha Honoré, are giving a dance in the gold ballroom of the Congress hotel. This is sure to be a chic and gay affair. Miss Honoré is one of the most popular of the season's buds.

The young set has had a wonderful winter, and is, as one of them expresses it, "still going strong," though one would think they had danced until the gunpowder would have quite run out of the heels of their shoes.

The second ball on the carpet is a St. Valentine's day affair. It is to be given at the Drake for the benefit of the undernourished German children. Mrs. Edward R. Litzinger is chairman of the ball committee, with Mrs. William L. Baum as co-chairman. Mrs. Albert E. Leight is chairman of the committee of the junior auxiliary of which Miss Olga Menn is vice chairman.

The work of helping feed the destitute children of Germany was undertaken immediately after the armistice was signed. A band of English Quakers, called Friends, began it, and with the assistance of American Friends and others have carried it on since then. The local office for this relief work is at 247 East 41st street, under the direction of Charles Nagel.

The Beau Monde on Foot.

Today the Lincoln park lions and tigers, who watch the passing world from behind their tedious bars, can catch glimpses of the active section of a group of the "beau monde" as it makes its way on foot up to Mrs. Arthur Ryerson's charming Georgian mansion which overlooks the north end of the park. She is giving a buffet luncheon in honor of Miss Muriel McCormick, and is inviting to meet her some of those most active in promoting opera.

Miss McCormick is a most devoted opera fan. Not only does she attend practically every performance of the Chicago opera but last summer she seldom missed a night of the delightful Ravinia opera.

Mrs. Ryerson's Sunday luncheons are becoming a popular social institution. On a fine winter's morning her guests are apt to make their way on foot through the crisp frost laden air. On such a day, when the sun throws pale shadows across the snow blanketed lawns, there is nothing more delicious than such a walk.

At the south entrance of the park St. Gaudens' statue of Lincoln, that embodiment of brooding tenderness, welcomes the wayfarer. Farther on the alert equestrian bronze statue of Gen. Grant dominates the land and the lake. From that point on the pedestrian meets many familiar celebrities done in stone or metal, including Benjamin Franklin, William Shakespeare, Linneaus, and Gov. Oglesby.

More Landmarks Giving Way.

If sculpture palls, the park visitor can include a stroll through the fine large houses that shelter animals, birds, monkeys, or snakes, or can visit the open air home of the Lincoln park bears, wolves, and raccoons. In short the way to the homes of those who dwell on the borders of the park is much too pleasant to be hastily traversed in a high powered car.

Still another landmark on the Lake Shore drive is soon to give way to the relentless march of progress. The Franklin MacVeagh house on the corner of the drive and Schiller street, which was in its day considered one of the show mansions of the city, is to be razed to make way for an eight story apartment house to be built by the Cudahy family.

The building now standing on this lot was designed by the greatest American architect of his day, Richardson of Boston. It is a stately stone structure, rather smacking of the medieval Italian gothic in style, recalling some of the massive palaces of Florence. Most of the west wing was added several years after the main house was put up to make room for an expected visit from Lord Curzon and the first Lady Curzon (Mary Leiter of Chicago). The visit never came off because of the untimely death of Lady Curzon.

David Adler is designing the apartment building which is to replace the former MacVeagh home. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cudahy and the Misses Mary and Clara Cudahy expect to occupy two of the eight apartments when the building is completed.

Call for Tea.

Even if the poet laureate of the Children's Memorial hospital does commit that usually unforgivable crime of splitting an infinitive, we here and now concede her the palm for making the smartest, snappiest verses at the call of charity or society that have ever enlivened a captious world. Her latest contribution, the call to the rummage tea to be given tomorrow afternoon from 3 to 6 o'clock at the residence of Mrs. Hamilton McCormick, 631 Rush street, is one of her best. It has already appeared in THE TRIBUNE's society column, so we may not repeat it here in its entirety, but we can repeat a few lively lines:

It's an opportunity
To surreptitiously bestow upon a worthy cause
The presents which we did not like which came from Santa Claus.
Of course, we do not dare infer that such was your sad fate.
But if you were more fortunate bring something else you hate.

A helpful income is derived from that excellent institution, the Rummage shop, which is run at 27 East Ohio street under the sign of the White Elephant, an income which is devoted to the aforesaid hospital one of the finest of its kind in the country. The shop enables those who have too much to get rid of their surplus and at the same time have the satisfaction of feeling that they are helping little ailing children. It is one of those occasions when the giver can subscribe heartily to the saying that it is more blessed to give than to receive, while the purchasers at the rummage shop frequently have opportunities to get a great deal for their money. It is altogether a neat and complete institution.

Thrift Gets a Hearing.

We are, though we may not know it, in the midst of a national thrift week. It began Jan. 17 and concludes tomorrow. The class in finance, carried on under the Federal Securities corporation, takes this occasion to call attention to its course. Next Friday morn-

Program and Tea at Eleanor Club for Vacationers

By Kate Webber.

THIS afternoon at 4 o'clock a program will be given in the lounge of the Central Eleanor club, 16 North Wabash avenue, for the members and their friends. These programs, which are held on the last Sunday of each month, are mainly for those who have spent their vacations at the Eleanor camp at Lake Geneva, Wis. The glee club, of which Miss Mabel I. Turney is president, will sing a number of songs, and Miss Florence Dibell Bartlett will give a talk on "Life in the Far West." Miss Bartlett will wear a Kiowa Indian costume procured on a recent trip to New Mexico. Following the talk tea will be served.

The Central Eleanor club, which is in its fourteenth year, was founded by Miss Ina Law Robertson, its original rooms being in an office building on Randolph street. Some of the foremost business and professional women in the city were numbered among the first names on the roster. The officers are aiming for a membership of 2,000, which is about all the present quarters will accommodate.

Miss Jessie Veeder is president of the association, which operates six residential clubs in the city, the Eleanor camp, and the Central Eleanor club. The latter organization is governed by a council of nineteen members. Miss Florence D. Bartlett is chairman of the Central Eleanor club. All of the clubs join in operating the Eleanor Junior club, a home at 22 Maple street, where twelve young girls are cared for and enabled to continue their school work in preparation for self-support.

Professional women, business women, and students all are eligible to membership to the club, where they may widen their scope of friendships and ideals, and have the advantages of the many activities. There are classes in civics, social evenings, "stunt" parties once a month, hikes on Saturday afternoons, gymnasium, dancing, millinery, and sewing classes.

One of the interesting committees is the one on fellowship, which interests itself in members who are ill or who need help. For several years the club has taken care of six French war orphans.

There is a tearoom presided over by a genius who knows just what girls like, and who knows calories, too. For a small sum members may have the most delicious luncheons and dinners. Small dining rooms are available for private parties; only recently one of the members was given her wedding dinner there.

The Glee club, of which Prof. Milon R. Harris is director, is in its third season, with thirty-eight members. They have sung for women's clubs, and during the last two seasons given two concerts. The members are busy preparing for the spring concert to be given early in March.

The club takes an active part in all permanent civic and social movements that further the interests of the community, having at various times prominent, public spirited men of affairs who address the members on different issues of the day.

NEWS OF THE MEN'S CLUBS

Shall there be more than one Rotary club in Chicago? The directors of "Old No. 1" have referred the question to the whole club for debate, and it will be discussed at the January monthly meeting at the Hamilton club on Thursday evening. As there is considerable division of opinion on the subject it is expected that the attendance will be large. Since the organization of Rotary in Chicago in 1905 it has grown around the world, with a total of more than 1,000 clubs affiliated with the International association. The policy of Rotary has been to limit club representation to one club to a city. There are now three clubs within the metropolitan zone of Chicago, aside from the Chicago club, one each in Evanston, Cicero, and Oak Park. There is a possibility that Evanston, Oak Park, or Cicero may eventually become a part of Chicago, which would raise a question as to the standing of the clubs in the admitted municipalities. There is in "Old No. 1" a number of influential members who favor the expansion of Rotary within the city, while others equally prominent and active do not approve. The directors, therefore, have referred the matter to the whole club. Final action by the International association would be necessary if additional clubs are to be established.

Rotarian Sir Harry Lauder, most beloved of Scottish minstrels, will be the guest and speaker at the luncheon of the Rotary club on Tuesday. Members are privileged to bring guests, including ladies, and a large gathering is looked for.

Melvin A. Traylor, president of the First Trust and Savings bank, will speak at the meeting of the Men's club of Hyde Park Thursday evening at 8 o'clock in the lecture room of the Hyde Park Presbyterian church, 53d street and Blackstone avenue. Margaret Lester will sing. The club will entertain the Oakland Men's club on this occasion.

The Food Products club will have a luncheon on Thursday at the Sherman hotel.

"The Trend Towards New Ideals of Marriage" will be the subject of a lecture to be given by Prof. George E. O'Dell at Sinai Social center, 4600 Grand boulevard, tomorrow evening at 8:15 o'clock. Prof. O'Dell will analyze the changes which have come about in the marriage institution as a result of the newer tendencies of present day civilization.

Tuesday evening the members of the Adventurers' club will have "ladies' night," when an unusual program will be given at the clubrooms, 40 South Clark street. The American Indian will be the topic of an entertainment of music and readings. On Friday noon Dr. L. J. Vandenberg will give an illustrated talk of life in equatorial Africa, from which spot he returned but recently.

ing at 11:45 in the La Salle ballroom Philip B Clarke, president of this corporation, will address the class, his subject being "How to Read a Bond Circular." It is a free lecture, and all women are invited to 't.

These classes are under the auspices of an advisory council, consisting of Mrs. Jacob Baur, chairman, and including such well known women as the Mmes. Joseph Fish, Joseph G. Coleman, Lambert O. Wile, E. M. Rosenthal, Potter Palmer, E. A. Leight, W. B. McKeand, Melville N. R. Rothschild, and George A. McKinlock, and Miss Mary Garden, with Mrs. Irving L. Stern, director.

Every day the list of those Chicagoans who have gone or are preparing to flit to other softer climes grows in length and impressiveness. Last Friday was a great moving day. Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey McCormick and their three small sons departed on that date for Miami, Fla., to be the guests of Mrs. McCormicks' parents, the Charles Deerings. Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Crane and family on the same day moved their household to Jekyl Island, where they have a beautiful house. They will stay there until the time to open their place at Ipswich, Mass., in the late spring.

The same day saw the Alfred Bakers and Miss Mary Baker embark for Santa Barbara, Cal. Miss Baker expects to go abroad in March. Others planning trips later are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cudahy and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Garfield King, who are going to France together, sailing Feb. 28. They expect to be gone only until the middle of April.

Departures and Arrivals.

Mrs. Alexander Stevenson and Miss Stevenson have already arrived in Italy, where they will travel until April or May, going then to France. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh J. McBirney leave here in a few days, with their daughter, Mrs. Joseph T. Ryerson, and Mrs. Louise Bowen Phelps, for southern France. They will spend a month or more at Cannes on the sunny Riviera. Mr. and Mrs. Norman Williams are already there, as is Mrs. Robert Hall McCormick. Robert H. McCormick is in Chicago visiting his mother, Mrs. R. Hall McCormick, at 612 Rush street.

In the face of so many departures it is pleasant to chronicle a return. Mrs. David Adler, who joined her sister-in-law, Mrs. Felton Elkins, in a hurried trip to Europe late in November, returned last Sunday. She and her husband are living in their new home at 1242 North State street, though the carpenters, painters, and other workmen are still at their labors there completing what will be one of the prettiest small houses in Chicago.

The Kellogg Fairbanks were pioneers in what has become a popular fancy, that of taking old houses and, while preserving that ineffable flavor of age which no architect can give a house, yet transforming them into the luxurious dwellings that people of today require. The results are almost always delightful and something that cannot be acquired otherwise.

This sort of transmogrification is going to be undertaken by George Porter when he makes his new-old house in North State street ready for occupation. He has already collected many rare furnishings and adornments for this house, and on his recent trip to the far east he added to this collection many interesting things. The house will not, however, be ready for residence until next winter.

The Miracle of the Washtub

One of the surprising things about Fruit of the Loom is that it comes out of the washtub even better than it went in.

This famous cotton can be laundered again and again, and the finish seems only to grow finer and the white even whiter.

There is no foreign substance in Fruit of the Loom—it is all pure cotton, fine, evenly woven, staunch and long-lasting.

For seventy years women have used Fruit of the Loom for their white sewing—in nightwear, sheets, shirts, aprons, and many other articles.

Fruit of the Loom

You can buy this time-tested fabric in leading stores not only by the yard, but also in ready-made garments; and not only in white, but now in colors as well—in colors that are guaranteed fast.

Fruit of the Loom is identified by the label, and the white goods are now marked on the selvage.

Seventh Paper—Goethe's "Faust."

I held it truth, with him who sings
To one clear harp in divers tones,
That men may rise on stepping stones
Of their dead selves to higher things.
("In Memoriam"; Canto I.) TENNYSON.

THERE, in that opening stanza of the first canto of "In Memoriam," is your key to the outer works of "Faust."

That it is the key is no unsupported assertion, for Lord Tennyson, not long before he died, informed an American gentleman that he had Goethe and "Faust" in mind when he wrote of "him who sings to one clear harp in divers tones."

This colossal work, vast though its proportions are, mysterious and mystical as many of its passages are, is not then a work to make us newcomers into the high altitudes of literature turn abashed away.

Not to be envied is the man who never has exercised his soul amid the profound abysses and the shining peaks of this book, which is like no other in literature and which attempts more than any other book of single authorship ever attempted. And yet one feels almost sorry for the novice in the early stages of his study of "Faust." It is no week's reading. With many moods—with wonder, bewilderment, delight, and sometimes with vexation and disgust and disillusion—will he falter over many and many a page. There is many a chance that he will abandon the book, for, revealing and sustaining as it is, it also is unmanageable, spasmodic, chaotic; now chiseled into marvelous splendor and dignity, now seeming tossed together to make jingles and doggerel.

What, then, is the theme?

Human life—its yearnings and its struggles to satisfy them, its strength in the struggle and its weakness. How sometimes we are in some part noble; how we are in the most momentous matters of human conduct and human relationships very imperfect; how the best of men is a creature of mixed motives, but how those motives through struggle and pain become purified; how, in short, we suffer and make others suffer and to what end this comes to pass—such, in some of its phases, is this mighty theme.

Difficult this drama is, but the steadying, guiding fact for the groping reader is that it is rock-bottomed on certain large elementals. Goethe, with the simplicity and forthrightness that give to so many of his utterances the antique gnomic quality, defined some of those elementals—fundamentals—of the edifice of "Faust." Let us listen to him:

"Wer nicht für andre thut, thut nichts für sich."

All words of one syllable, you see, and only nine of them.

Coupled with this fundamental that he who does nothing for others does, by that very token, nothing for himself is another—the utterance of a note of, and for, inspiration—that was a far newer note when Goethe, looking out in 1773 over a disheartened and stagnant Europe, began to formulate "Faust" than it is now.

That note was a bold negation. "All," he said, and kept on saying all his long, fruitful life, "is not vanity." You find that in the collection of his sayings published in cheap, convenient form under the title of "Maxims of Goethe"—one of the most precious books ever put together. You find it in his approach to that "awful problem of evil" which is the main theme of "Faust," and in his attempt at a solution of the problem. For his position is that so long as man is a striving creature he must, by the limitation of his endowments, be an erring creature. In the play he said that in eight words, again all of one syllable—

Es irrt der Mensch, so lang er strebt.

As early as when he was 21 years old, in the buoyant, boyish oration on Shakespeare, of whom he said, "I am ashamed of myself in Shakespeare's presence," as early as that he had gripped to himself the central idea of "Faust," a work to which he was not to put the last touch for sixty years. That idea was:

> That which we call evil is only the reverse side of good, and is as necessary to its existence and to the tout ensemble as it is that the hot zone must burn and Lapland must freeze in order that there may be a temperate zone.

With what conviction, what rapture, what variety he wrought out that central idea! Not only was all we live and suffer and enjoy not vanity but hope he declared was "the second soul of the unhappy" and man's finite aspiration "the glimmering of heaven's light that he calls reason."

What do most of us find ourselves musing more and more seriously upon as we grow older? Upon God—whether we wish to or not; upon the idea of God. Let us open this book and follow one of the most wistful, plaintive and profound scenes in it. It is the scene in which Margaret, with that solicitude which is at once so timid and bold in loving women, questions her beloved about his idea of God. Is he right? Is he safe? Faust answers her at first with the fond cajoleries with which ardent, confident young men—for Henry is young now—are wont to put such questioning aside. Then he grows grave and utters an idea of God which for solemnity, reverence, and a worshiping agnosticism is not to be paralleled in literature or dogma. How simply the scene begins, how gravely it proceeds, how profoundly it closes! Follow it quietly. You are listening to two hearts:

MARGARET.
Promise me, Henry!—
FAUST.
What I can!
MARGARET.
How is't with thy religion, pray?
Thou art a dear, good-hearted man,
And yet, I think, dost not incline that way.
FAUST.
Leave that, my child! Thou know'st my love is tender;
For love, my blood and life would I surrender,
And as for Faith and Church, I grant to each his own.
MARGARET.
That's not enough; we must believe thereon
FAUST.
Must we?
MARGARET.
Would that I had some influence!
Then, too, thou honorest not the Holy Sacraments.
FAUST.
I honor them.
MARGARET.
Desiring no possession.
'Tis long since thou hast been to mass or to confession.
Believest thou in God?
FAUST.
My darling, who shall dare
"I believe in God!" to say?
Ask priest or sage the answer to declare,
And it will seem a mocking play.
A sarcasm on the asker.
MARGARET.
Then thou believest not!
FAUST.
Hear me not falsely, sweetest countenance!
Who dare express Him?
And who profess Him,
Saying: I believe in Him!
Who, feeling, seeing,
Deny His being,
Saying: I believe Him not!
The All-enfolding,
The All-upholding,
Folds and upholds He not
Thee, me, Himself?
Arches not there the sky above us?
Lies not beneath us, firm, the earth?
And rise not, on us shining,
Friendly, the everlasting stars?
Look I not, eye to eye, on thee,
And feel'st not, thronging
To head and heart, the force.
Still weaving its eternal secret,
Invisible, visible, round thy life?
Vast as it is, fill with that force thy heart,
And when thou in the feeling wholly blessed art,
Call it, then, what thou wilt,—
Call it Bliss! Heart! Love! God!
I have no name to give it!
Feeling is all in all:
The Name is sound and smoke,
Obscuring Heaven's clear glow.
MARGARET.
All that is fine and good, to hear it so:
Much the same way the preacher spoke,
Only with slightly different phrases.
FAUST.
The same thing, in all places,
All hearts that beat beneath the heavenly day—
Each in its language—say:
Then, why not I, in mine, as well?
MARGARET.
To hear it thus, it may seem passable;
And yet, some hitch in't there must be,
For thou hast no Christianity.
FAUST.
Dear love!

In his youthful pride, in his doubts and his self-love and selfishness, in his remorse and his strivings, in his disillusions and discouragements, in his roysterings and his seductions, in his vast learning, and in his patient experimentation that, we know now, gave to mankind foretokens of the discoveries of Darwin and the theories of Spencer, in the service of his middle life, in his regrets, and in the serenity of his Olympian old age—in all that—Goethe was Faust and Faust was, and remains, aspiring mankind. All that he had lived, thought, suffered, enjoyed, learned, all the wrong he had done (Frederica and the other trustful ones), all the good he had effected, all his scorns, all his wrath and his calm, all the grotesqueries of his lively fancy and all the sublimities of his far vision he flung into this drama. And so I like to think of it in the light of two radiant pictures. The first comes down to us from the hand of Goethe's mother—her picture of her boy on a winter's day on the frozen Main where it moves by the ancient, imperial city of Frankfort:

> There skated my son, like an arrow, among the groups. The wind had reddened his cheeks and blown the powder out of his hair. When he saw my cloak of crimson and fur, which had a long train and was closed in front by golden clasps, he came toward our carriage and smiled coaxingly at me. I took it off; he put it on, threw the train over his arm, and away he went over the ice like a son of the gods. I clapped my hands for joy. Never shall I forget him as he darted out from under one arch of the bridge and in again under another, the wind carrying the train behind him as he flew.

Sixty years pass.

That radiant boy is more than eighty now, but the years are a crown, not a burden. The old man is climbing a hill above Ilmenau's mines, to a woodland hut where he had been wont to revel and to sing long time before. His eyes rest upon some verses he had written on the wall in the days of his youth. The German of them is here printed beside Mr. Longfellow's very faithful, very simple translation—the sole truly simple one of the four or five I know—because I want you to get the feel of them in double measure:

EVENING.
O'er all the hilltops
Is quiet now,
In all the treetops
Hearest thou
Hardly a breath;
The birds are asleep in the trees:
Wait; soon like these
Thou, too, shall rest.

EIN GLEICHES.
Ueber allen Gipfeln
Ist Ruh,
In allen Wipfeln
Spürest du
Kaum einen Hauch;
Die Vögelein schweigen in Walde.
Warte nur, balde
Ruhest du auch.

The old man reads them slowly as he stands on the Gickelhahn. The tears are running down his cheeks. He looks out over the dark pines and softly repeats the closing words —

Warte nur, balde ruhest du auch.

"Come," he says, turning to Mahr, "come! Now we will go down again."

In less than a year he closed his eyes forever. But he died with those eyes to the sun, and his last words were, "More light!"

He is the eagle of literature.

Next Sunday—Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe."

TABLOID BOOK REVIEW

Last week's composite list of best sellers at five leading Chicago book stores was:

FICTION.

"If Winter Comes," by A. S. M. Hutchinson.
"Cytherea," by Joseph Hergesheimer.
"Simon Called Peter," by the Rev. Robert Keable.
"Beggars' Gold," by Ernest Poole.
"Brass," by Charles G. Norris.
"The Other Magic," by E. L. Grant Watson.

NONFICTION.

"The Outline of History," by H. G. Wells (in the one volume cheaper edition).
"Secrets of the Sahara," by Rosita Forbes.
"Woodrow Wilson as I Know Him," by Joseph Tumulty.

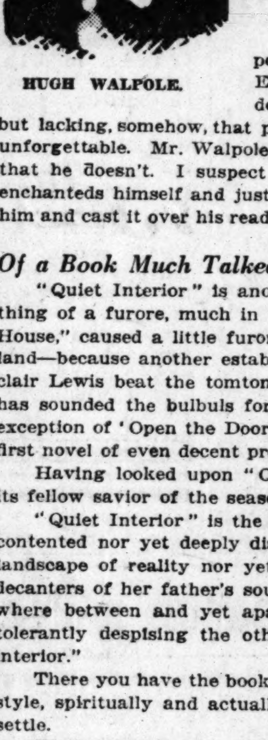
AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Six books most in demand at the Chicago public library last week were:
"If Winter Comes," by A. S. M. Hutchinson.
"Brass," by Charles G. Norris.
"The Briary Bush," by Floyd Dell.
"The Outline of History," by H. G. Wells.
"Mirrors of Washington," anonymous.
"Queen Victoria," by Lytton Strachey.

By Fanny Butcher.

HUGH WALPOLE once wrote in a copy of "The Green Mirror" which he gave me, "This his favorite book—but he's damned if he doesn't write a better one."

I couldn't help wondering the other day as I read "The Young Enchanted" if this were the "better one."



HUGH WALPOLE.

It is, in a way, a continuation of "The Green Mirror." The two young enchanteds are Henry and Mellicent Trenchard, who were mere saplings in the older book and who are just beginning to stand sturdy young trees and wave their branches in the sunshine of a new and bewilderingly free and lovely afterwar England. They are not yet pillars of the forest enough to buffet back a rude wind. The tiniest breeze can still flutter their leaves. But they are strong enough to have no fears of being uprooted.

Perhaps the metaphor of trees is not so far fetched as it may seem, for the whole book has something of the quality of an enchanted forest.

Youth, with its enchantment, its power . . . a friend of mine said "the spirit of the book is a lovely thing."

It is that.

But there will be those who like the other Walpole better, the Walpole of "Fortitude." "The Young Enchanted" is a very light, a very fragile thing, done with much skill, much charm, much "spirit," but lacking, somehow, that permanence which made "Fortitude," for instance, unforgettable. Mr. Walpole may think this is the "better one," but I suspect that he doesn't. I suspect that he fell into the hands of these two young enchanteds himself and just wrote them into a book to break their spell over him and cast it over his readers.

Of a Book Much Talked About.

"Quiet Interior" is another English first novel which has caused something of a furore, much in the same fashion, I should say, as "The Narrow House," caused a little furore here and has lately been talked about in England—because another established novelist proclaimed it as remarkable. Sinclair Lewis beat the tomtoms for "The Narrow House" and Hugh Walpole has sounded the bulbuls for "Quiet Interior." "We have, with the possible exception of 'Open the Door' and 'Quiet Interior,' by Miss Jones, not a single first novel of even decent promise this year," Mr. Walpole says.

Having looked upon "Open the Door" and found it good, we hasten to its fellow savior of the season.

"Quiet Interior" is the story of a girl, "a hovering spirit, neither facily contented nor yet deeply distraught, dwelling neither in the incredible bleak landscape of reality nor yet among the padded cushions and pinpricks and decanters of her father's southern, sheltered, cigar-scented arbour; but somewhere between and yet apart, surveying both; testifying the truth of one, tolerantly despising the other, from the still fastidious fortress of a quiet interior."

There you have the book in a paragraph, a sort of modern Henry Jamesian style, spiritually and actually, the story of a spirit that hovers but does not settle.

That it is the story of the love of a wren and of her calm acceptance of her potential lover's attraction for her sister isn't really the important thing about it. That it is full of conversation, at times "clever," at times very nice and jolly, and at other times sort of smarty hasn't anything much to do with it either. Even with the frills injudiciously placed now and then Miss Jones hasn't succeeded in ruining the design of her book, which is to be a blueprint of the mind of the sort of person who is inherently passive. It's a good enough literary job to make every one really interested in Miss Jones' future.

It isn't a good enough one to be a brilliant past.

Concerning a New Broom.

From Rome comes a new magazine devoted to the arts, a distinguished volume of the new in the seven seas. Broom, it is called succinctly, and it bears on its back page, balancing a jaunty cartoon trade mark of a gay soul rejoicing in his broom, this paragraph from "Moby Dick":

"What of it if some old hunks of a sea captain orders me to get a broom and sweep down the decks? What does that indignity amount to, weighed, I mean, in the scales of the New Testament? Do you think the Archangel Gabriel thinks anything the less of me because I promptly and respectfully obey that old hunks in that particular instance? Who ain't a slave?"

The format of the magazine is most distinguished, the paper is all deckle edged, the type is beautiful, the margins are luxurious, and the illustrations—of modern art—are tipped in.

But it is the list of contributors which gives one confidence in the permanence of the Broom's charm.

They include James Stephens, Amy Lowell, J. D. Beresford, Pablo Picasso, Conrad Aiken, Lew Sarett, James Oppenheim, Walter de la Mare, Lola Ridge, and Louis Untermyer. Harold Loeb and Alfred Kreymborg are the editors. They subtitle Broom "An International Magazine of the Arts Published by Americans in Italy."

Welcome, But Are You Needed?

A new book page is in our midst. The Daily Maroon, the tageblatt of our alma mater, has now a literary editor, John Gunther, and reviews each week. The university might take the department under its guidance and give a course in book reviewing. Nobody, so far as I have ever known, was ever tutored in the art of reviewing, and everybody—it seems—wants to do it. They have novel-writing courses and drama workshops and poetry seminars—why not criticism circles? Meanwhile, the right hand of fellowship to the lit. ed. of the Maroon.

"The Plucky Little Country"—Also Shrewd.

Emile Cammaerts' "A History of Belgium," which has just been published by the Appleton company, is, so they say who know, the first complete history of that "plucky little country" (to quote the late war correspondents) that has ever been published in America. It reviews Belgium and her life from the Roman invasion to the present day.

Fanny Disagrees With the Germans!

"Babette Bomberling's Bridegrooms" is a translation of a story by Alice Berend, the latest German sensation in humorists. It is the story of a fond mamma's attempts at marrying her Babette wisely, if not too well. It is a novelized "Poudre aux Yeux," which we used to read in first year French. The Germans thought it was hilarious. Perhaps you will. I don't.

R. L. S. in a New Edition.

The first two volumes of the new Vailima edition of Stevenson have appeared. It is over twenty years since the Edinburgh edition was published. Since that time much new material has been discovered, more than a hundred poems, thirty or so unpublished letters, and a great deal of early material that was in the hands of American collectors. After the first two volumes there will be three volumes every other month until the set is complete.

There are to be 2,000 sets, 1,000 for America and 1,000 for England. England's quota is already oversubscribed.

Rex and His Bother-in-Law.

Rex Beach and his brother-in-law, Fred Stone, who wasn't what Ring Lardner calls a bother-in-law, went hunting together and out of the jaunts came "Oh, Shoot!" a book of hilarity on the tip-top of Alaska and the bayous of wherever they have bayous and the buttes of wherever buttes live and multiply It is a very funny record, not only because Rex Beach can be a funny when he wants to, but because Fred Stone was unintentionally "killing" when he was killing.

Showing How They Get That Way.

"The New Policies of Soviet Russia," a group of three papers—"The Meaning of the Agricultural Tax," by N. Lenin; "The New Economic Policy of Soviet Russia," by N. Bukharin, and "The Intellectuals and the Russian Revolution,' by S. J. Rutgers—has just been published by the Charles H. Kerr company. To quote them:

"You cannot educate or persuade people into new ways, but you can cut the economic ground from under their feet and throw them into the ranks of the proletariat. The capitalist newspapers call this capitalism. We call it a brilliant understanding of economic determinism."

And the Fish Laughed.

An ardent angler took a friend fishing. The latter knew nothing about the gentle art, but was set up with all the necessary tackle and a nice comfortable seat on the bank. The experienced hand started fishing a few yards higher up the stream.

Presently the novice said: "How much do those red things cost?"

"I suppose you mean the float?" said the angler. "That costs about ten cents."

"Well, I owe you ten cents," said the novice. "The one you loaned me has sunk." K. S.

Anything to Please.

Something Was Burning.

My father had been complaining to me of having terrible heartburn and said he was going to take a tablet to see if it would help.

Just when my mother called from upstairs, "What do I smell burning down there?"

We were in the kitchen. Father said he knew his heartburn was bad, but he didn't suppose you could smell it upstairs. We all had a hearty laugh. E. C. S.

The Best Selling Book in Chicago
IF WINTER COMES
By A. S. M. HUTCHINSON
The novel that every one is reading. Over two hundred thousand already sold, two hundred and fifty-second thousand on press.
Harry Hansen in The Chicago Daily News says: "A. S. M. Hutchinson's 'If Winter Comes' accomplished a curious amalgam. It pleased both those who liked 'Main Street' and those who didn't like it. And the most interesting thing about it all is that 'If Winter Comes' deserved all the popularity it got."
Hutchinson's other novels. Once Aboard the Lugger—The Happy Warrior, and The Clean Heart, are also well worth reading.

Should She Own Her Child?

Charlotte Lovell's life was a drama of hidden motherhood. A member of one of America's most distinguished and fashionable families, she locked in her heart all memory of her great adventure in love. To those about her, she was simply "THE OLD MAID."
And it is under that title, ironically dramatic when the facts are known, that her life story has been written by America's most distinguished novelist—EDITH WHARTON.
In none of her earlier works—either in "The House of Mirth," "Ethan Frome," or in "The Age of Innocence," for which she was awarded the Joseph Pulitzer Prize for the greatest novel written by an American during the year—has Mrs. Wharton revealed the nooks and corners, the sun and shadow, of a woman's heart as she has done in "THE OLD MAID" in the February issue of The Red Book Magazine. It is a work that critics and the general reader alike will proclaim to be the outstanding story of 1922.
Also in this issue:

TO THE LAST MAN
ZANE GREY
Author of "The Mysterious Rider," "The Man of the Forest," etc.

THE "new Zane Grey" is the story of a double-barreled hatred, of a feud within a feud. It has given Zane Grey a bigger scope for his talent than any of his other famous stories of the West. It is based on facts—on the Pleasant Valley war, one of the most notorious feuds in the history of Arizona.
It is the story of how two unforgiving factions fought the war of the Tonto Basin desperately, doggedly, to the last man, only realizing its utter futility when it was too late. And through it all runs the golden thread of a clean man's love for a pure woman.
Leading the Isbels against Lee Jorth and his band of cattle rustlers was Jean Isbel, who at the same time found himself madly in love with a girl from whom he was apparently separated by an impassable barrier.
There are other women in this story who cannot be forgotten; there are scenes which stick in the memory as if one had actually witnessed them.
Here is a story which might be called romantic history. Whether you read it because you are one of the millions of Zane Grey's admirers, or for the literary vigor of its exciting romanticism, you will enjoy every page. To the Last Man is now on sale wherever books are sold. Illustrated. $2.00.

Relieves Rheumatism

Musterole loosens up stiff joints and drives out pain. A clean, white ointment, made with oil of mustard, it usually brings relief as soon as you start to rub it on.

It does all the good work of the old-fashioned mustard plaster, without the blister. Doctors and nurses often recommend its use.

Get Musterole today at your drug store, 35 and 65c in jars and tubes; hospital size, $3.00.

THE POTTERS

by J. P. McEvoy

PROLOGUE.

Probably more people are selling life insurance than any other commodity in the world. . . . There are several valid reasons. . . . First, in order to sell something you must have something to sell. . . . Is there anything in the world of which there is more to sell than life insurance? . . . The supply is inexhaustible . . . besides, when one kind seems to be getting low they invent a new one. . . . Compared to it selling water power is a fleeting and transitory occupation. . . . Second, you must find somebody who doesn't want what you are selling and sell it to him. . . . Again, the field is vast, limitless . . . who doesn't want insurance? . . . Everybody! . . . What career could hold brighter promise than that in which you bravely set forth with an absolutely inexhaustible supply of insurance to sell to an absolutely limitless supply of customers? . . . There is still one more reason why the field is so crowded . . . everybody has at least five relatives selling insurance . . . multiply the population by five and you have the rather impressive total of 550,000,000 insurance salesmen in the United States alone . . .

Scene I.—Pa Potter's Office.

Insurance rates change six months after your birthday . . . or rather six months before your next birthday. . . . Pa doesn't know this now, but he will soon . . . it wasn't merely for sweet remembrance sake he received a birthday card from that insurance agent some months ago . . . he can remember that card well because it was the only one he got. . . . Well, that isn't all he's going to get, for here comes the agent who sent it . . .

AGENT (breezing into Pa's office beaming and extending the glad hand of fellowship):

Mr. Potter, I believe? My name is Robert W. Palmer, and I represent the great Yorkshire Insurance company with insurance in force of over one billion dollars and assets totaling two hundred and fifty million dollars. Think of it.

(Pa tries to think of it, but can't. After money gets up over ten thousand dollars it all sounds alike to Pa.)

AGENT (as if addressing a public meeting):

Our money is all invested in the highest grade securities, yielding a high rate of interest, but never for one instant—no, sir, not for one instant—do we sacrifice safety for a high return.

(Well, that should take a great load off Pa's mind . . . undoubtedly it must have worried him.)

PA (feebly):

But . . . but . . . but . . . but . . .

AGENT (shaking a menacing forefinger at Pa):

Tut . . . tut . . . tut . . . tut . . .
We do more to keep children in school and women from the poorhouse than all the charitable organizations in this state. Now, Mr. Potter . . .

(Crowds up close to Pa and looks him squarel, in the eye . . . Pa cowers visibly . . . seems to quiver, his eyes fix in a hypnotic stare.)

Now, Mr. Potter, how would you like the assurance that no matter what might happen to you your salary would continue to be paid to your family just the same?

PA (with almost pathetic eagerness):

I'd like it. Sure.

(Sure. Who wouldn't? How should Pa know this is the surefire opening sentence set down in the salesman's confidential manual of instruction. "The protective side of the sex instinct may be appealed to in selling insurance to men. Males all show anxiety in making adequate provision for their families. Appeal directly to this instinct and you will get the desired response; as, for example: 'Mr. Jones, would you like to perpetuate your present earning power to your family as long as you live?'" The response is inevitable . . . "Yes." . . . We're all Joneses to the insurance men . . .)

ILLUSTRATIONS —BY— J. H. STRIEBEL

AGENT (continuing relentlessly):

That is exactly what our special family protection policy will do. For a little extra cost we can fix it so that you don't have to die to realize on your investment—we'll pay you the income if you become totally and permanently disabled and unable to work.

(Pa doesn't know it, but before he ever collects on that clause he'll be more disabled than Venus de Milo and Victory of Samothrace combined.)

PA (visibly impressed):

That sounds interesting. How much would a policy like that cost?

(Once they ask that question they're lost.)

AGENT (using sales psychology and avoiding an answer, the approved method of sustaining interest of prospect):

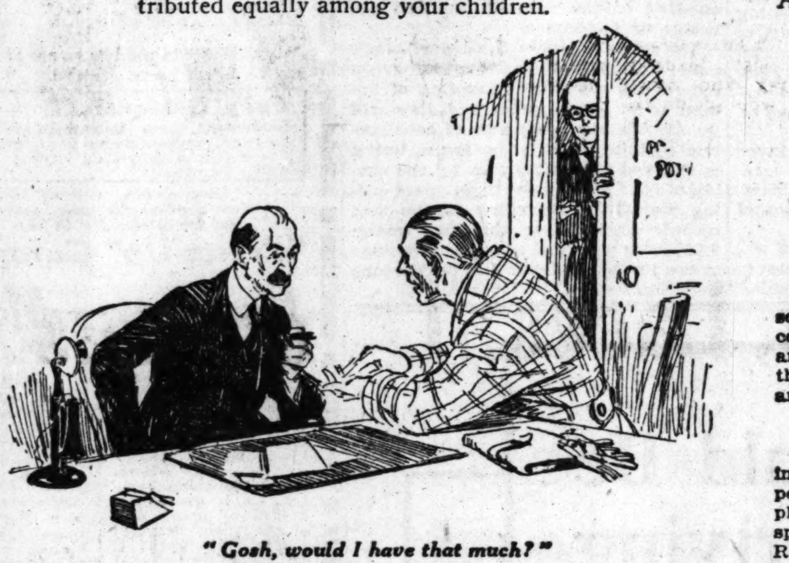
Well, Mr. Potter, I assume that your family could get along on a definite income of $300 a month. That kind of a policy is one of my best sellers. The company will agree to pay Mrs. Potter the $300 every month for 240 months (he doesn't say twenty years; it doesn't sound so big), and if she should not survive you twenty years the remaining monthly installments will be distributed equally among your children.



"Gosh, would I have that much?"

PA (half to himself):

They'll get theirs. . . . I'll say they will.
You can leave that part to Mamie and Bill.

AGENT (with a look that might be interpreted as of sympathetic fatherhood):

What's more, you know my company is a great dividend payer. . . .

(It is now Pa's turn to nod in understanding approval . . . of course, he doesn't know a damthing about it.)

AGENT (doing his stuff):

And the $300 would be increased considerably by our annual distribution of surplus. Another feature of this policy which should not be overlooked (and it won't be if he can help it) and that is the constantly increasing reserve which you can borrow against if you are hard up (well, Pa won't overlook it in that case, either) or if you leave it intact it grows into a nice nest egg for your old age. For instance, the cash value of your policy (get the your stuff . . . very deep) when you are 68 years old will be $28,582.47.

PA (round-eyed):

Gosh, will I have that much?

AGENT (emphatically):

Sure! Or, if you wish to continue your insurance in force, the company will give you a paid up policy for over $40,000, providing an income to your family, of over $200 a month guaranteed without any further premium payments on your part!

PA (awakening as from beautiful dream):

How much does that kind of a policy cost?

AGENT (now he begins to talk fast):

Mr. Potter, the cost to a man of your age, if he can pass the medical examination (ah, ominous words!) is $1,919.59 for the first annual premium. At the end of the first year and every year thereafter you will get a dividend (he lingers lovingly on those words; seems to stroke them); yes, a dividend which will reduce your outlay considerably. In fact, the average cost to you during the next twenty years (not 240 months this time, you'll notice), if we continue on the same dividend scale as at present, should be (ah, here comes the evil tidings!) should be $1,377.37 per annum.

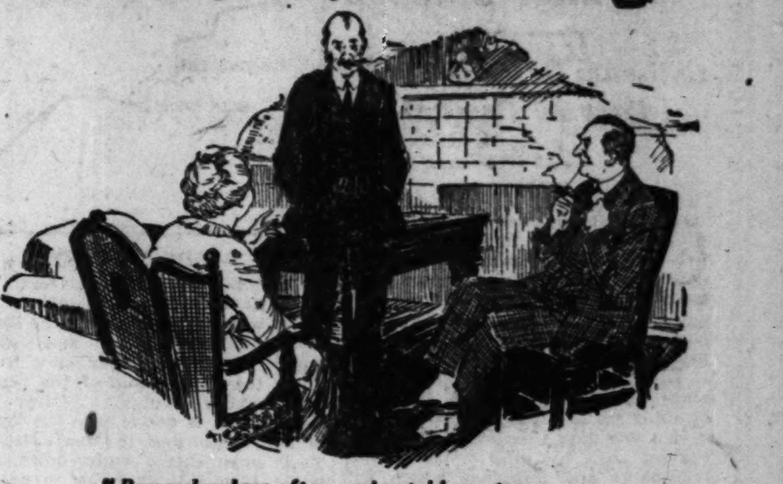
(At these crool words Pa passed out of the picture . . . the income sounded sweet, but the outlay laid him out . . . he didn't really come to completely for several hours after the Agent had winged his flight . . . and then he congratulated himself on his second escape . . . but as the poet so fittingly said after he had tried in vain to escape buying insurance: Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud? . . .)

Scene II.—The Potter Living Room.

(Evening of the same day. . . . Charley Axelson, a relative in the insurance business—one of the 550,000,000 previously accounted for—"happens" in . . . plays with the Baby, who continues with childish simplicity to ask him why he has a big nose, until Ma puts him to bed . . . speaks kindly to Mamie, who is trying to decide whether or not she'll call Red up, so is consequently a bit absent in her replies . . . was it just coincidence that Gladys Rankin and Red both went to see the "Sheik" the same night? . . . If she only knew. . . . And did Red take Gladys or did he really take some fellow, as he said! . . . Maybe he's true to her after all . . . these clairvoyants don't know everything. . . . Yes, she'll call him up . . . no, he might think she was too anxious . . . what to do, what to do . . . meanwhile the relative is finally getting down to business.)

AXELSON:

You know your rate is changing and this is your last chance to get a policy at your present age. What are you carrying now?



"Remember how often you've told me, too,
What a college course would have done for you."

PA (easily):

O, about ten thou', I guess.

AXELSON (in alarm):

Is that all! What would become of the Baby and his education if you stepped off prematurely?

(From the confidential sales manual: "The parental instinct actuates through almost all forms of social life. The love for a child is directly appealed to in the suggestion of a policy to provide education.")

MA (anxiously):

That's very true, Pa; that's very true.

PA (uneasily):

I don't know just what to do.

AXELSON (baying on his heels):

You can now get a policy that will assure the baby's college education at a cost to you now of only $108 per year. If you should die the baby would get $15.54 per month until he is 18 years old, and then $90 a month for four years, so that he could go through college.

MA (thoughtfully):

That does seem like a lot to spend,
But then it goes for a noble end;
Remember how often you've told me, too,
What a college course would have done for you.

PA (weakening):

When would I have to pay all that?
The Merry Yuletide left me flat.

AXELSON (soothingly):

You can give me a note for thirty days or pay a quarterly premium for one-fourth of annual plus 3 per cent.

MA:

Of course, we really should go slow,
But we have a duty that we owe
To educate our child, you know.

PA (finally succumbing to the long day of pounding from every quarter):

O, very well; c'mon, let's go.

(And so saying he signs the application and agrees to be examined at the agent's office next day . . . as Lem says in Emperor Jones, "We cotch him" . . . but maybe Pa won't pass the examination . . . maybe he has blood pressure or somep'n . . well, we shall see . . .)

(And That's That—Until Next Sunday.)

GEORGE WASHINGTON ESSAYS BY BOYS AND GIRLS

HOW about your essay on George Washington—have you sent it in? A lot of boys and girls are going to win some nice fat prizes in this contest, and somewhere right now there is a boy or girl who is soon to be the richer by $2,500 of about the easiest money he or she ever is likely to get.

Just think, for 250 words or less you have as good a chance as any of your schoolmates to earn this prize or any one of a number of other prizes to be awarded in this contest. Why not go after one? It ought to be easy. You know all about our first President. There was much about him to interest every school boy and girl. Tell what you think of his noble life and what influence it has had on yours and on the history of our country.

Rules of the contest are printed on this page and essays appear every day in The Daily Tribune.

Counted Not the Cost.

Washington, whom Providence left childless that his country might call him father, is in my estimation America's greatest statesman.

The commander in chief of the American army stands the noblest leader that has ever been intrusted with his country's life. His patience under provocation, calmness in danger, and courage when all others despaired, his quick, relentless blows when action was possible, his generosity to his foes and sole desire the freedom and independence for America, and other things combined make him the foremost figure in history. He did not win alone, but sought strength and guidance from the God of armies and of light. The independence of our country was laid not only in valor and patriotism, but in prayer. Washington's name is and will remain the priceless heritage of the American people.

There were other patriots of Washington's time who were truly great and noble, whose services to their country were gratefully remembered, but his is an incomparable glory. His was a devotion to a sacred cause that counted not the cost, and his was an enthusiasm tempered by judgment. His is a character which stands the test of time. His was a moral grandeur, joined with practical wisdom, never surpassed among the most renowned figures in the world's history. The republic will live as long as it reveres and emulates the virtues of George Washington.

ENBEL ABRAHAM,
Cambridge, Ia.
Age 18. Grade 12.
Teacher, Miss G. V. Mincks.

Strict Code of Morals.

In his common as in his military life Washington was noticed for his good judgment and even temper.

Friends who knew him well knew him to have strong passions, but not once during his public life was he known to give way to sudden enthusiasms or the surprise of the moment.

During the time of his greatest hardships and the time when plots were made against his reputation he was always a straightforward, just, and honorable man. In fact, the things he valued most were fortune, position, and reputation; but when he saw that his country needed him he was ready to give up at any moment those things which he valued so much.

It is said that when Washington came into public notice he carried with him the most strict code of private morals ever known and that in every sense of the word he was a true gentleman. George Washington was one of the best of patriots and Presidents that the United States has ever known, for his aim was entirely for his country's good and not for his own.

Inspiration to Country.

Our brave forefather, with his tall, strong figure and open, intelligent face, is the idol of the great American race. The fatigues, exposure, and hardships of the long, hard war could never impair his undaunted determination or courage. Bravery, justice, prudence, and firmness were some of the qualities of this great man.

He had a natural refinement and a keen perception of character. His generosity, kindness, and comradely manner won the love and respect of his soldiers.

He put his whole heart and soul into the great work of his country after he had conducted one of the greatest revolutions in history.

George Washington established a new and sturdy form of government. He made the government for the people and by the people a wonderful success.

No country can boast of a man who loved his country more than George Washington, the inspiration of his country.

FLORENCE GOLDSMITH,

Age 13. Grade 7B, High school.
Teacher, Miss Moran.

Follow His Example.

We, the young people of America, are nearing the time of our lives when our associations and thoughts and our ideals will be fused to make up ourselves. In our youth our lives are so plastic that almost any habit or association will cling to us. Youth is the most dangerous period of our earthly lives. During this time we need right thoughts, we need real men as ideals, we need some one to guard us from those habits which may lead us down the broad path of failure.

That some one, that guide, we may have if we take as our guardian and ideal George Washington, the father of our country. His courage, his truthfulness, his courtesy, his cleanness, his fidelity, and his faith in our God stand out as his principal virtue.

A man that had as many virtues as Washington may be well taken by America's youth as its ideal.

Let us then follow his example, teach our friends to do right as Washington did, keep faith in God, and above all—remember the future.

ALFRED DAUZIGER,
616 S. 4th street W., Cedar Rapids, Ia.
Age 17, senior Washington High school.
Teacher, Mr. Turner.

Always the Leader.

George Washington showed his ability to lead, even when a child. As a boy, when he played soldiers with his friends he was always the leader, so history tells us. But I think from the way he acted afterward that Washington was always fair to the other boys with whom he played and didn't try to hog the leadership.

In after years, when the governor of Virginia had to send a man whom he could trust to the French fort on the Ohio river, he chose Washington. It was a long, dangerous journey. Several times Washington came near being killed, but he finally returned with the answer of the commander of Fort Duquesne.

Some time later, when the revolutionary war broke out, Washington was chosen commander-in-chief of the revolutionary army. He remained commander-in-chief until the end of the war.

Then because Washington had won independence from England for the people they wanted to make him emperor or king. He would not hear of this and finally they elected him President. Washington served two terms of four years each and the people wanted him to be President again. He refused, declaring that it was too kinglike to accept a third term. He was glad to do his duty to his country, but then he was ready to give the other fellow a chance.

I admire Washington because of his bravery, generalship, wisdom, and foresight, but most of all because of his spirit of fair play.

JOSEPH HAMBURGER,
5004 Drexel boulevard, Chicago.
Age 12. Grade 6, University Elem. school.
Teacher, Miss Leora Vail.

A Great Human Magnet.

George Washington understood men. He could touch their hearts, comfort them, and lead them. Although reared in wealth, he was not spoiled; on the contrary, he nobly shared hardships with his fellow men.

Washington's personality was an important factor in his success. His personality gained friends; his ability kept them. Washington was a great human magnet, for he attracted every one who came in contact with him and drew them into his friendship.

He is looked up to not only in America, but also in every other country on the globe. Foreigners speak of him as the father of men. His broadmindedness outshone the great Napoleon's selfishness.

Sayings of Washington are repeated daily. We strive to fulfill them. The men who succeed the most in being like Washington are those whose names appear in the annals of great men. The individual who has been the most successful in modeling his life after Washington's was Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln not merely read "The Life of Washington," but he labored to be like him.

As a model man Washington surpassed all his fellow men and he will undoubtedly surpass all those to come. The world needs and will need men like George Washington. So start now, Young America!

CHESTER BATTLES,
919 3d avenue, Rock Island, Ill.
Age 16. Junior, Rock Island High school.
Teacher, Miss Hanna.

A Man's Man.

Nothing can express better the character of George Washington than these four lines taken from Henry Van Dyke's book of poems:

He thought without confusion clearly.
He loved his fellow men sincerely.
He acted from honest motives purely.
He trusted in God and heaven securely.

Above all, the character of Washington had fewer inequalities and a rarer union of virtues than any one man ever possessed, either before his time or after.

But there is one reason why he was the best loved man of his own period of life and the model and ideal type of manhood for the young men from generation to generation who are facing life's battles for the first time, and that is because Washington was so human, so much a man's man.

He had no rosy path to glory, but instead a path filled with thorns and hard rocks. He knew what it was to be humiliated, deserted in times of greatest stress, and to be criticized and condemned most unjustly. He knew what it was to have put every ounce of energy and brain power into some undertaking and then to fail. But, having failed, Washington did not cease fighting. With all the power of his indomitable will and unfaltering courage he forged ahead over the obstacles and fought his way, inch by inch, yard by yard, to victory and success.

And because Washington is a man after the hearts of men his memory will never die among the strong, just, God fearing men of the world.

First in Our Hearts.

Looking back through the ages when many great people lived we pick out one man as our favorite. Who? The man who crossed the Delaware, breaking ice as he went. For what? For life, liberty, and peace for you and me.

George Washington still lives. In books? No, not in books, but in our memory.

Washington has sent an example for all Americans. He was always polite and courteous and told the truth. When a youth he wrote "Washington's Rules on Conduct," which every American boy and girl should read.

When the declaration of independence was signed he signed it as a patriot. He led the American armies through ice and snow so that we could have a free land.

Washington admired children who told the truth and loved their country. So let us do these two things and be admired by the immortal angel.

Let us be thrilled by the name George Washington when we hear it, and let it always mean liberty and truth to us.

Self-Reliant and Alert.

Some people have said that the opportunities George Washington received enabled him to become a leader, general, first president, and greatest of all Americans. To some extent he owed his greatness in future years to his early training, but those opportunities of his youth were not made for him as especial gifts, but were won by him through himself.

He made himself esteemed and well liked by his personality; he always showed great intelligence in managing business matters, especially those of his estates; and he was an honest and upright young man—all through his own endeavors.

He made himself indispensable, and when the right opportunity came, George Washington was known to be the most capable and best fitted, and he received the commission. Opportunities of any kind are not won by mere luck, but they can be won by honest endeavor and earnest actions. Thus Washington won his opportunities.

His quick decision and keen judgment when deciding questions of importance always aided him. These qualities, with his self-mastery and clear headedness were, in a great part, due to three years he spent in surveying the wilderness; but the opportunity of surveying had not been bestowed upon him. This opportunity had been gained, with the help of some fundamental learning at school, by his own self-training and diligence. In the field of surveying he found it necessary to be self-reliant and alert.

It was through his great qualities of honesty, self-reliance, alertness, self-mastery, and keen judgment that Washington won his everlasting fame in statesmanship and in war, and not through any political favoring or mere luck.

Possessed Moral Courage.

George Washington was a born leader. He possessed moral courage. Washington believed in honesty and kindness, and he lived up to these principles.

We ask ourselves why he was the only man out of hundreds of others that was chosen commander-in-chief of the continental army? He had a good character, and a good character is the open door to success. He possessed the qualities of leadership. Because of this he was chosen commander-in-chief of the army and later President.

After the revolution he retired to his home, where he lived till he was made President. During his term as President he showed great fortitude on account of the many hardships.

Courage, like character, brings success.

He died at his home in Mount Vernon, but the words, "First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen," will always ring in the ears of the good American.

Never Ceased Trying.

Washington was a man with great perseverance. If he had not had such a quality, he would have never made a success and his name would not stand out as it does today.

His perseverance helped him to win battles when his side was greatly outnumbered. When he was our president he had to have steadfastness to go through what he did.

Most men would try once or twice and then give up; yet Washington never ceased trying until he had accomplished his purpose.

His sympathy was also great. He showed it in many ways. When his soldiers were captured at Fort Lee and were murdered in cold blood, he was looking through field glasses from a cliff a mile away. When he saw slaughter of his men he cried like a child.

He proved his sympathy at Valley Forge when his men were suffering from the lack of clothing and food: he shared his possessions with them and suffered just as they did.

Washington was by no means perfect. He had faults as well as virtues. Yet his virtues exceeded his faults, or we would not hear about him today.

Yet with all his greatness Washington was an unassuming character. He was not so unassuming, however, that he failed to impress the men of his time. Even today we remember him for his perseverance and sympathy.

Asked Nothing for Himself.

Every country, it would seem, in every crisis has had a man of the hour who arises and carries the country through that crisis. Such a position did George Washington fill in our revolution. He put a foundation under this country that has proven strong enough to uphold the glorious republic it has become.

Although an aristocrat and a royalist at heart, he had the foresight and clarity of vision to see what a republican form of government would do for America and did his utmost to accomplish it, even to the extent of refusing supreme power for himself.

The name of George Washington has carried with it down through the years the thought of absolute honesty, of square and fair dealing, of tenacity of purpose, of strict adherence to the right, of great dignity and personal pride. In short, he had those characteristics which comprise personality. His personality so stamped itself upon those who met him that it is said they would remember even his apparel to the minutest detail.

Under heartbreaking conditions Gen. Washington raised an army and led it to victory. He was entirely fearless and asked nothing more for himself than he had to give to his army. He would needlessly expose himself to danger at times when he would mingle with his men and hearten them with his presence.

George Washington rests in state in his crypt in beautiful Mount Vernon, to which daily many make pilgrimages, but his real monument is this wonderful United States of America.

Unselfish to the Last.

George Washington won the title of the father of his country through his great personality and his great interest in his fellow men. His boyhood days were spent on a farm near the Rappahannock river. George grew up to be an honest and truthful young man. George always loved all games and books pertaining to war. He also wrote a book containing 110 rules, which was of great value to him through his years of service to his country.

After George grew to be a man he spent much of his time buying tracts of land and staking it off into lots to build homes on. While George was in Virginia he met some men who had served in the late war between England and Spain, and they taught George how to use the gun and sword with great skill, which was a great help to him later.

Washington made friends with the Indians and they all loved him for his frank and honest ways. When Washington first went to war in 1754 his one aim was to be true and loyal to his country always.

When France threatened war with the United States Washington said, "I will not consider my age, but stand up for our rights."

For months Washington led a hard life, but to his great joy there was no war with France.

He took sick Dec. 12, 1799. He was unselfish to the last and did not think of himself. He died Dec. 14, 1799. And so with the death of George Washington we lost one of the most wonderful characters the world ever knew.

Firm and Resolute.

The father of our country, the creator of peace and liberty in his native land, was George Washington. He was born in the year of 1732. While a youth he lived with his mother on a large farm in Virginia. His father died when he was 11 years old.

Washington was a patriot, firm and resolute as the rock which lies upon mother earth's bosom. When he gallantly cross the Delaware the heart of this great nation was sailing with him. It was then that this patriotism was revealed. The many battles he fought were for the independence of his country, where humanity would find its nest.

George Washington always suffered with his comrades, and he always dealt honestly with friend or foe.

Washington planted that we may reap.

Teacher, Miss Langon.

Learned Self-Control.

The life of George Washington has been studied by many high minded men, and they have found him worthy of all the honor and respect which the people of today grant him.

There are many incidents that we remember in his earlier life, but we honor him mostly for the great deeds which he performed in protecting our great nation in the time of strife, and heading it, which was the will of the people.

If his life had ended at the close of the revolutionary war, his career would have been a remarkable one, and would have given him lasting fame. That he performed the further task of heading a new government with wisdom, and a new nation with success, reveals the greatness to which he had grown.

Washington was a noble figure to stand in the forefront at the beginning of a great nation's history. He had learned the lesson of self-control by experience, and we think of him only as the calm and self-contained general and President.

His greatest power lay in his character. He met the many responsibilities resting upon him with honesty and unselfishness of spirit.

Being the originator of our country, Washington set a good example for all of the citizens to follow.

At all times our nation needs not better but more men like him.

MOTORDOM

Advance Guards of Motor Show Enter Chicago

Coliseum Groomed for Its Part in Pageant of 1922.

CHICAGO is now the automobile headquarters of the world. All this week there will be great activity at the Coliseum, Coliseum Annex, and First Regiment armory, where the twenty-second annual National Automobile show opens Saturday. Manager Samuel A. Miles and L. L. Fest, who has assisted Mr. Miles since the first exposition here, are cleaning up the final details.

In a few days Charles Tietzel of Evergreen park will ship in the tons of trimmings and trappings which will convert the vast buildings into bowers of color and beauty. Mr. Tietzel and his assistants will install the decorations.

Many of the manufacturers who exhibited their 1922 passenger car creations at the New York show have sent their models directly here, and they will be rolled on to the floor Friday night. Others will send their cars from the factories.

Car values this year are giving the purchasers more in value than ever before in the history of the industry. When Chicago staged its first show automobiles were a luxury and almost a curiosity. Today they are regarded as an adjunct to business.

Inclosed types of cars are proving more popular than ever this season. It is estimated that fully 25 per cent of the passenger cars for 1922 will be inclosed vehicles. In 1919 the percentage was 10 and last season 17 per cent.

Many meetings and conventions of national importance will be staged here during show week. Chief among the features will be the Old Timers' club, which numbers in its membership most of the leaders who have been in the game five years or more.

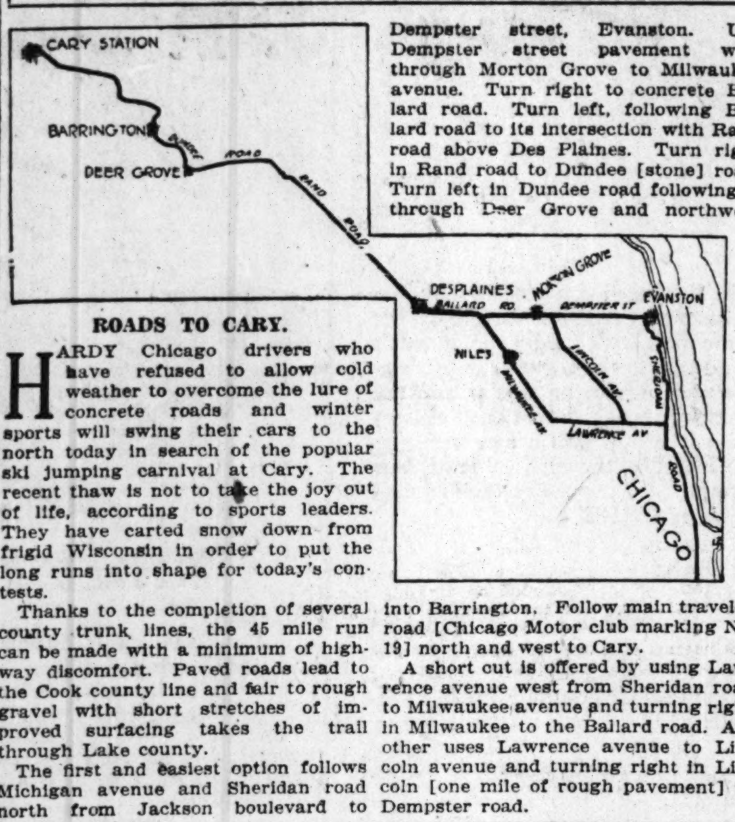
Another important session will be the assemblage of the National Automobile Dealers' association at the Hotel La Salle Jan. 30 and 31.

Among the attractive features at the show will be the display of four new makes of cars never before exhibited at a local event—the Earl, Durant, Wills-St. Claire, and the Rickenbacker. Eighty-one manufacturers will be represented this season, and more than 180 makers of accessories.

Although there will be thousands of visitors here during show week, there will be plenty of room at the hotels. No difficulty is looked for on this score.

THE TRAIL TO WINTER SPORT



ROADS TO CARY.

HARDY Chicago drivers who have refused to allow cold weather to overcome the lure of concrete roads and winter sports will swing their cars to the north today in search of the popular ski jumping carnival at Cary. The recent thaw is not to take the joy out of life, according to sports leaders. They have carted snow down from frigid Wisconsin in order to put the long runs into shape for today's contests.

Thanks to the completion of several county trunk lines, the 45 mile run can be made with a minimum of highway discomfort. Paved roads lead to the Cook county line and fair to rough gravel with short stretches of improved surfacing takes the trail through Lake county.

The first and easiest option follows Michigan avenue and Sheridan road north from Jackson boulevard to Dempster street, Evanston. Use Dempster street pavement west through Morton Grove to Milwaukee avenue. Turn right to concrete Ballard road. Turn left, following Ballard road to its intersection with Rand road above Des Plaines. Turn right in Rand road to Dundee [stone] road. Turn left in Dundee road following it through Deer Grove and northwest into Barrington. Follow main traveled road [Chicago Motor club marking No. 19] north and west to Cary.

A short cut is offered by using Lawrence avenue west from Sheridan road to Milwaukee avenue and turning right in Milwaukee to the Ballard road. Another uses Lawrence avenue to Lincoln avenue and turning right in Lincoln [one mile of rough pavement] to Dempster road.

Uncle Sam's Hat in Ring Against Grade Crossings

Government Declares War on Chief Highway Menace.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special correspondence.]—The grade crossing must go, and it will be eliminated wherever possible on the roads of the federal aid highway system, which will be built as a result of the passage of the federal highway act. When the roads which form the primary or interstate system are completed no grade crossing will be allowed to remain that it is at all practicable to avoid. Every effort will be made to make the roads of the secondary system equally safe, but in this case it is recognized that elimination may not be practicable in all cases at this time.

In making this announcement the bureau of public roads, under whose supervision the fund is allotted and construction is undertaken, is putting into effect a policy which it has long advocated in principle and whose adoption it has urged with increasing effectiveness upon state highway officials for some time past. The policy is meeting with hearty coöperation on the part of the states, and the American Association of State Highway Officials, by resoluion, has pledged its best efforts to coöperate to eliminate grade crossings on new construction.

In addition, the policy finds favor among the railroads, some of the leading carriers already having lent cheerful aid in avoiding the construction of more grade crossings.

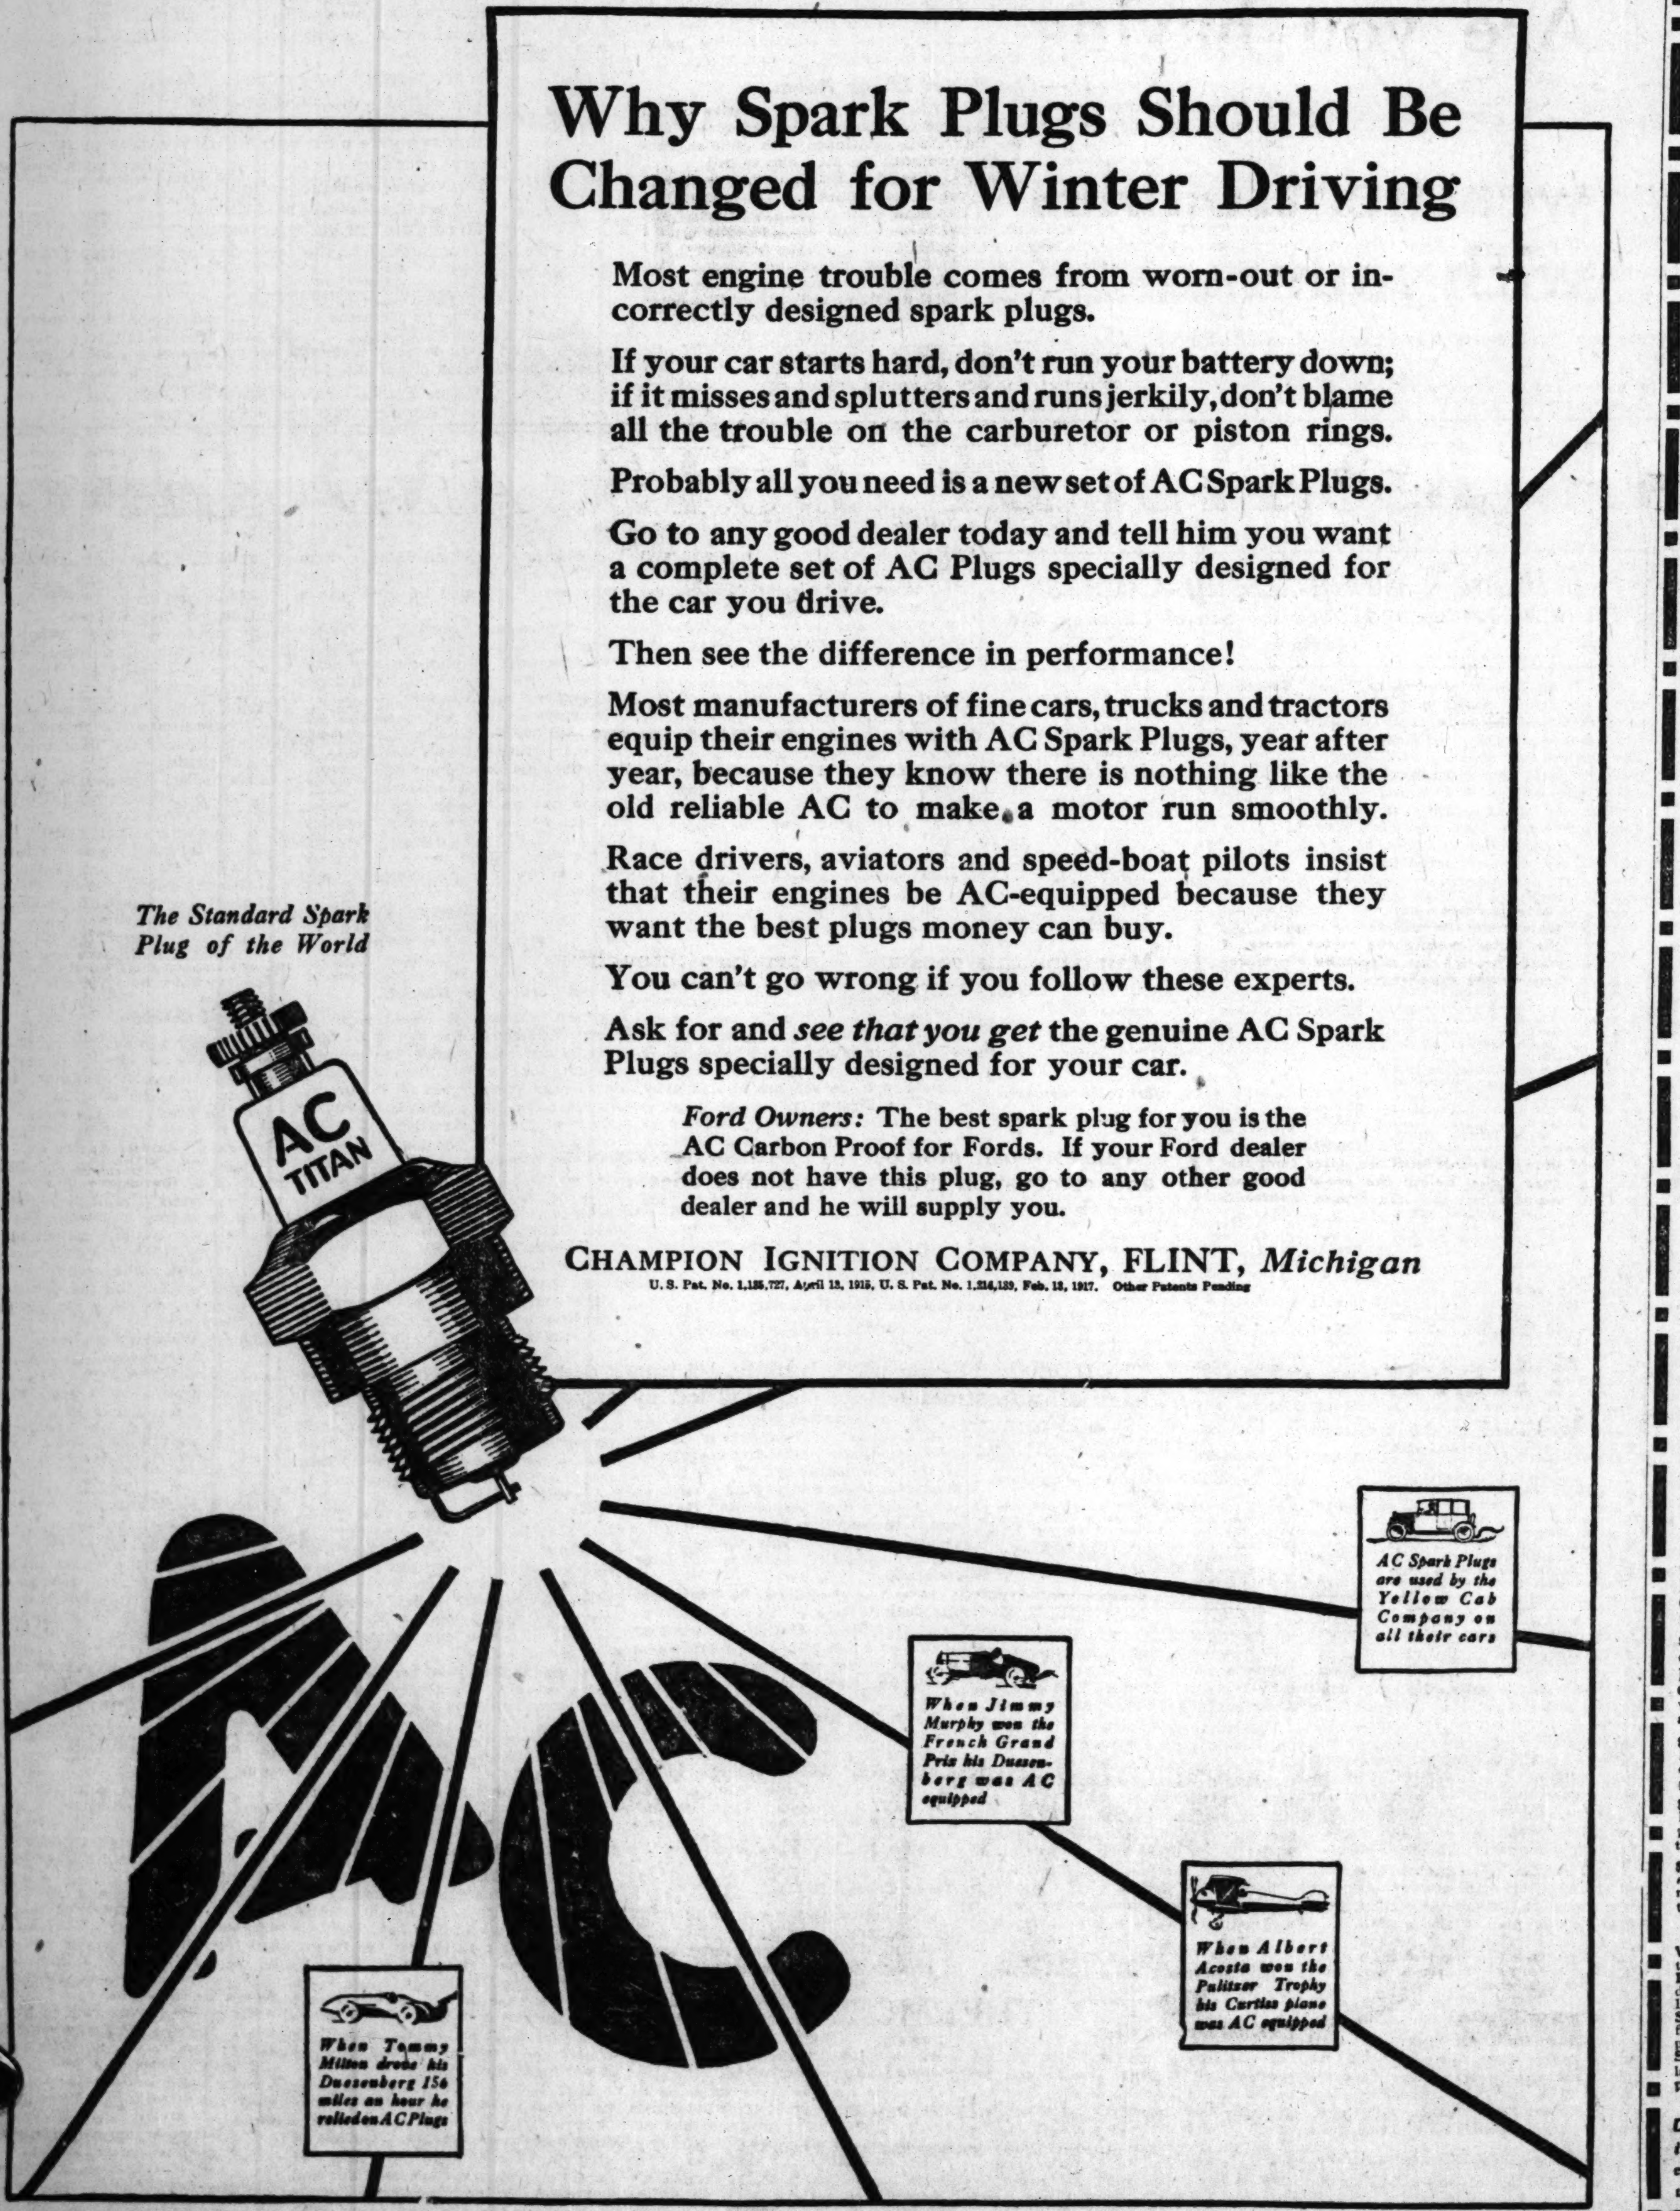
Instead of grade crossings there will be constructed wherever possible in the future either a bridge or an underpass where roadway and railway intersect. Important roads which now cross and recross railroad lines at grade hereafter will be located entirely on one side of the railroad, even though to do so may increase the cost of construction. State officials, realizing the need of eliminating grade crossings, have stated their desire to coöperate with the department in carrying out this plan.

Where crossings are unavoidable, or where local interests justify construction of highways to cross railroad lines, the road will be so located as to pass over the track or under it. In most instances of this sort the railroads bear one-half of the cost of building the bridge or underpass.

The prime object of the department's policy to eliminate grade crossings on federal aid roads is the saving of human lives. This policy probably will involve increased expense of construction in the case of some roads, but it is believed this is justified by the saving of life. During the three years ending with 1920, according to the best records available to the department, 3,636 lives were lost at grade crossings in the United States and 10,644 persons were injured.

THAT GARY ROAD

GOING to Michigan City? You can, eventually, and with comfort, thanks to the long delayed approval given last week by Indiana and federal authorities to the proposed trunk line running from Gary along the edge of the Dunes to the Michigan state line. Government approval of the highly important highway was announced yesterday by James T. Voshell, district engineer in charge of federal aid work in the middle west. He reported that the new trunk, replacing the impossible stone and gravel road which for years has been the chief drawback to Michigan tours, will be a 25 foot road. Its surface will probably be of concrete. Work on the Gary section is scheduled to start early this spring.



The Standard Spark Plug of the World
AC TITAN
AC
AC Spark Plugs are used by the Yellow Cab Company on all their cars
When Jimmy Murphy won the French Grand Prix his Duesenberg was AC equipped
When Albert Acosta won the Pulitzer Trophy his Curtiss plane was AC equipped
When Tommy Milton drove his Duesenberg 156 miles an hour he relied on AC Plugs

Why Spark Plugs Should Be Changed for Winter Driving

Most engine trouble comes from worn-out or incorrectly designed spark plugs.

If your car starts hard, don't run your battery down; if it misses and splutters and runs jerkily, don't blame all the trouble on the carburetor or piston rings.

Probably all you need is a new set of AC Spark Plugs.

Go to any good dealer today and tell him you want a complete set of AC Plugs specially designed for the car you drive.

Then see the difference in performance!

Most manufacturers of fine cars, trucks and tractors equip their engines with AC Spark Plugs, year after year, because they know there is nothing like the old reliable AC to make a motor run smoothly.

Race drivers, aviators and speed-boat pilots insist that their engines be AC-equipped because they want the best plugs money can buy.

You can't go wrong if you follow these experts.

Ask for and see that you get the genuine AC Spark Plugs specially designed for your car.

Ford Owners: The best spark plug for you is the AC Carbon Proof for Fords. If your Ford dealer does not have this plug, go to any other good dealer and he will supply you.

MOTORDOM

Roads Congress Puts New Kick in U. S. Program

Highway Gospel Spread Over Entire Country by Chicago Show.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

CHICAGO generated sufficient good roads enthusiasm and information last week to take Uncle Sam's billion dollar highway program well over the first breakers of the 1922 building season. Ten thousand highway delegates, drawn from every state in the Union, from Canada, Mexico and South America, took their leave of the city yesterday, following the close of the annual good roads show and congress, to carry the new highway transportation text back to their own communities and to foster the greatest national building program of the century.

Every phase of the modern highway transport problem was thrashed out by specialists in the five sessions of the national congress. Among the important conclusions reached were:

That railroad grade crossings must be eliminated from main traveled roads.

That the expansion of agricultural production in America is dependent just now on the rapid development, not only of farm to market roads, but also of connected national highways.

That immediate organization of state police forces is vital to the continued growth of motor transportation.

That the widening of pavements already laid and the building of wider pavements on new roads have become an absolute necessity in view of the increasing highway traffic.

That every community in the United States should first learn the details and later support the national highway program which has as its object the connecting of state built roads to form a continuous network of trunk lines over the country.

That beautification of national and local highways, already launched by the memorial tree planting campaign, should be carried out at once.

Leaders of the American Road Builders' association placed particular emphasis on the grade crossing menace, and made it an issue of their 1922 campaign. They brought out facts to show that more than three-fifths of all fatal accidents on American roads last year occurred on grade crossings.

In this contention they were supported by Cook county authorities who have already started a comprehensive survey of the local crossing evil. The Chicago plan includes the taking of traffic counts at grade crossings on all main traveled roads; the checking of the number of trains passing the crossing each day, and the charting of the extra hazardous points on the road system.

Railroads have pledged their cooperation in the movement to eliminate crossing danger. Representatives reported to the congress that the bigger companies are ready to share their end of the burden in constructing underpasses or railroad bridges.

The experts found, in checking over national highway finances, that more than $1,000,000,000 is already available from bond issues, special assessments, and automobile license revenue to put over the huge building program in the next few years. They reported the public every where awake to highway advantages and ready to support the national construction campaign.

THE INQUIRING REPORTER

He's Out to Learn the Truth About Motordom.

The Question.

What is the most important issue in the 1922 good roads campaign?

Where Asked.

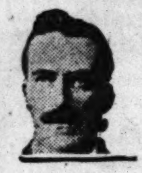
In the Coliseum.

The Answers.

Thomas H. McDonald, chief of the U. S. bureau of public roads, Washington, D. C.—The issue of lower transportation costs is paramount. We must build roads and at once in order to move everything we need to eat, to wear, and to enjoy from producer to consumer cheaper than they are moved now. Connected, paved highways, permanent in construction and built to withstand the increasing weight of modern traffic, will solve the farmer's transportation problem at once. They are the vital link needed now to connect up our civilization.

C. S. Lee, chairman of the resolutions committee, American Road Builders' association—Wider roads are needed most this year. The eighteen-foot pavements running into the country that have been looked upon as standard have served their function. They are wholly inadequate today, as every one knows who has motored in the vicinity of any city of size. Thirty feet should be the minimum this year.

White Eagle, Indian representative of Custer Battlefield Highway association—Getting the funds. That's the prime issue this year in the far west. We know the value of good roads out there, but it is very hard to get enough money to put them over. Western roads must be built at once or all the splendid building in this part of the country will lose half its value for the nation.



C. H. Dean, chief engineer, Massachusetts department of public works—Building the roads to carry the weight of modern traffic is most important. It seems to me that this year should cash in on all of the experimentation of the past decade. A road fails in its value if it cannot withstand the traffic that goes over it.

C. M. Upham, chief engineer, Delaware and North Carolina—Taking the dangers out of the highway is the issue of the day. We must eliminate grade crossings, relocate roads to avoid dangerous grades and bad curves, and generally build for the safety of the traveling public.

Smiths Buy Autos.

Farm Journal has sent questionnaires to 12,824 Smiths on their subscription list, and finds that 11.5 per cent of them will purchase or have purchased automobiles in 1921.

THINNING CEMENT.

The attention of car owners should be directed to the inadvisability of thinning rubber cement with ordinary gasoline, which contains too much oil to be safe for that purpose. Oil is a deadly foe of rubber. High test gasoline or bisulphide of carbon are the proper agents for thinning rubber cement.

The Auto Alloy.

Molybdenum is the only steel alloying element mined in sufficient quantities in this country to take care of our fast growing industries. A mountain of molybdenum ore at Climax, Col., makes the United States independent of the rest of the world in the production of the finest alloy steels. The advantage of molybdenum steel was discovered during the great war when its strength and toughness made possible the light "baby tank." It is only natural that the automotive industry should now be using it in large quantities.

How They Ride.

The increase in automobiles is an index of growing demand for transportation rather than a sign of withdrawal of business from rail lines, according to Philip H. Warren of Stone & Webster, speaking before a convention of investment bankers in New Orleans. Riding in street railway cars is much heavier per capita today than it was five years ago, and much heavier than fifteen years ago, indicating that demand for all kinds of travel facilities is increasing.

CHAUFFEUR RATING.

The occupation of a chauffeur, who is also a competent mechanic, has as high rating as a locomotive engineer.

ASTRONOMY

TELESCOPES AND MICROSCOPES.

A drop of any liquid will magnify objects seen through it. If you are ever stumped for a magnifying glass, bend a loop in a wire, paper clip, or hair pin, and catch a drop of water in it. A very large drop will give strong magnification, a lesser drop will give a weaker power, and a film so thin that its surfaces are bent in to form a double concave will minify.

The field of vision of such lenses is small, but they are, theoretically at least, the most efficient of all, and forest fires have been reported whose only source appeared to be some dewdrop acting like a burning glass.

A drop of water held in a clean round hole bored in a metal plate is the form employed by scientists when they work with water lenses. Such a lens makes an excellent low powered objective for a microscope or a high powered eye piece for a telescope.

All glass lenses, scientists find, are full of minute heights and hollows which cannot be eradicated. They are caused by the scratching of the particles of abrading powder used to polish the lens, and no matter how fine the material used, they invariably occur. Although usually too fine for the eye to see, they are large in relation to light waves, and produce a diffused halo about every bright point, exactly like a light seen through the sleet covered branches of a tree.

But the surface of a liquid is actually, by its molecular nature, smooth. It is the smoothest thing there is. We do not know whether molecules have points and irregularities on them or not, but we do know that so far as they are concerned in the surface of a liquid, they all lie flat in one plane, and a lens made of water is therefore actually true.

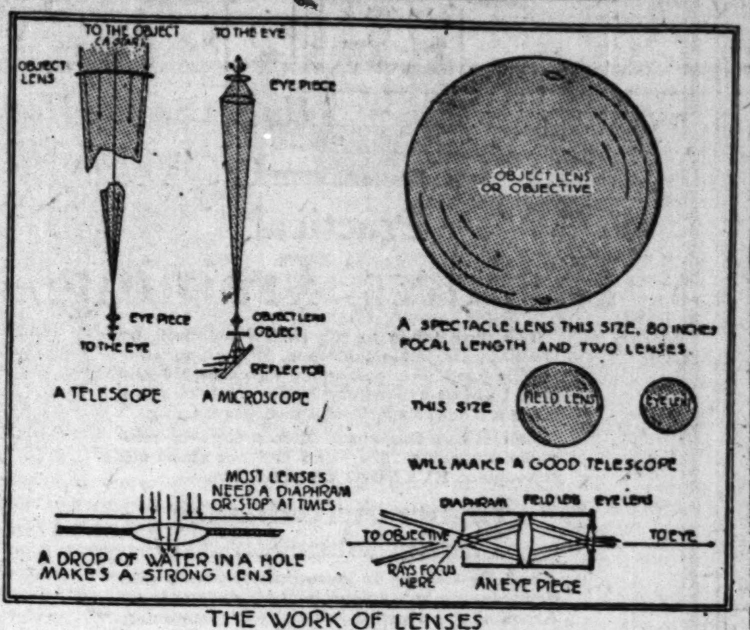
In both telescopes and microscopes the aperture of the front lens must always be kept as small as the work at hand will permit. If you contemplate building a glass remember this as your fundamental principle. The aberrations inherent to all optical systems demand it, and exact the price of a blurred image from all violators. In a telescope the aperture must be made large to admit light, and to compensate for the increased aberration the focal length of the lens is increased.



THE WORK OF LENSES
BY S.F MAXWELL

All telescopes are as long as practical. This is the second fundamental principle. In microscopes there is never a dearth of light because all sorts of condensers, mirrors, and strong lamps are available and so their strong objectives are frequently the size of tiny jewels, set almost upon the object.

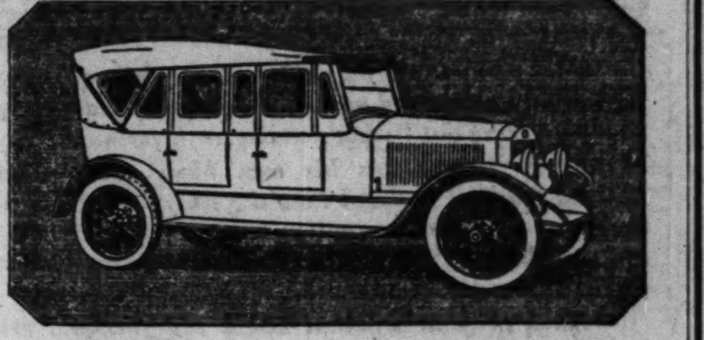
But little can be gained by increasing the power of the eye piece beyond what the objective will bear. Every lens—and in particular every lens used as an objective—has a definite limit of resolving power, above which it is impossible to go. In telescopes the resolving power is measured by the lens' ability to separate double stars. This is influenced by the diameter of the glass.

The resolving power of a lens in seconds of arc equals 4.5, divided by the diameter in inches. The power of the telescope is found by dividing the focal length of the objective by that of the eyepiece. Few telescopes can stand a power of more than sixty diameters to each inch of aperture; a further increase in power merely magnifies and blurs what is already there.

Astronomers always employ the lowest powers possible to adequately view the object. The largest telescopes rarely use more than 300 diameters of magnification, and sometimes much less, although they have eyepieces up to 1,000 diameters available. The reason low powers must be generally used in astronomy, while diameters up to 10,000 are known in microscopy, is that all telescopes must look up through a sea of air whose winds twist and distort the light and prevent the bigger telescopes from being more than a quarter or a third efficient.



All-the-Year-Round Use

ALL THE year round use, fifty-two weeks in the year, is more and more demanded from a motor car.

Our winter top equipment, storm-proof and snug, eliminating drafts and rattles, is substantial and inexpensive. It is fitted with ample glass windows allowing clear full vision. It is far better, in both looks and comfort, than mere conventional curtains opening with the doors.

Such an enclosure is especially serviceable on the Stanley, which is itself so well adapted for winter going and standing.

Its self-contained power plant not only provides the stored energy for unmatchable flexibility, and smooth, powerful pulling in hard winter going, but also protects the car when standing—which purpose, when attempted in other cars by diluting the water, can be only uncertainly and wastefully achieved.

A visit to our show rooms to see the Stanley chassis and to inspect our various body types, both open and closed, would be well justified.

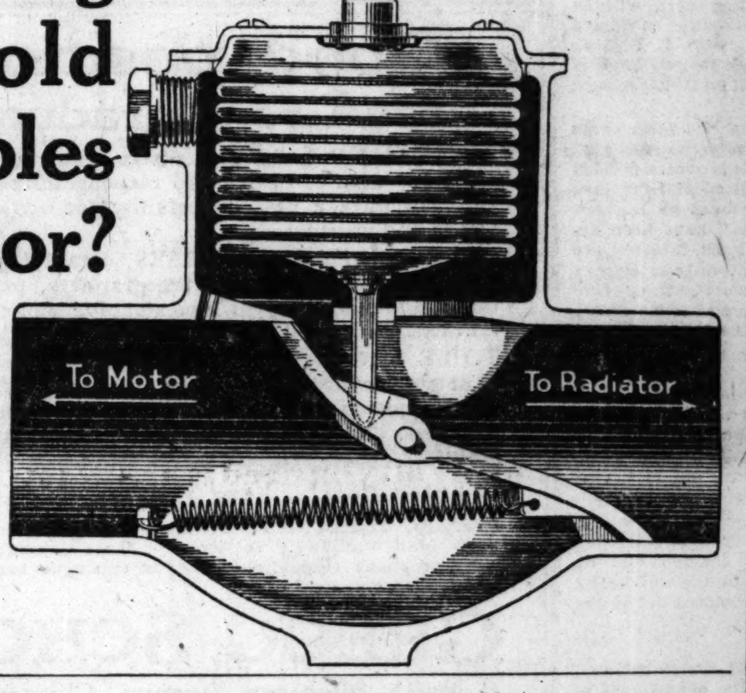
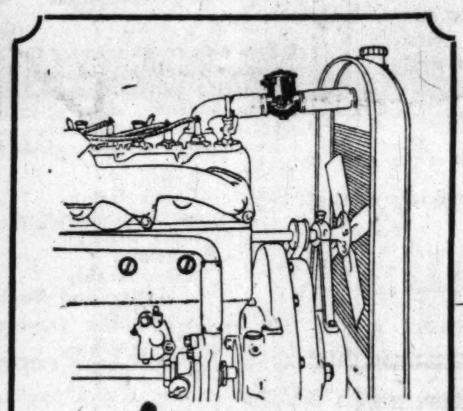
Are you having the usual cold weather troubles with your motor?





How the Rayfield Motor Thermostat Operates

When the motor is cold, the butterfly valve is closed and the circulation of water from the radiator is stopped. As the water around the motor heats, it rises through passages and circulates around the diaphragm.

The diaphragm which contains a sensitive liquid expands when the water circulating around it reaches a pre-determined temperature and is fully expanded at a higher temperature.

The expansion of the diaphragm opens the butterfly valve by means of the pin and circulation of the water to the radiator is allowed until the water temperature falls below the pre-determined point when the diaphragm contracts and the butterfly valve again closes.

The Rayfield Thermostat

furnished complete, ready for attaching. Standard size for use on practically all motor cars costs but

$10

Then use a Rayfield Thermostat that warms your motor quickly and keeps it warm—that makes starting easier and makes your motor perform smoothly in zero weather.

Here is what the new Rayfield Motor Thermostat does: Forces the required motor temperature almost immediately, assuring a quick getaway.

Maintains this constant temperature throughout the running time, assuring smooth operation.

Keeps the motor warm long after it is stopped, assuring easy starting again for several hours.

Saves gasoline because gasoline combustion is more complete in a warm motor.

Reduces repair bills because with better vaporization and combustion unburned gasoline does not escape into the crankcase to thin out the lubricating oil.

Saves oil because draining of the crankcase is necessary only one-fourth as often.

Insures more efficient performance because carbon deposits and fouled spark plugs are minimized.

The Rayfield Thermostat is simple, automatic and free from all adjustments—can be installed by anyone in 10 or 15 minutes.

Simply cut out two inches of the upper water hose and put the Thermostat in its place.

Put a Rayfield Thermostat on your motor today and do away with your cold weather troubles.

For sale by all the leading garages and accessory dealers. If your dealers cannot supply you, you can order direct through the Rayfield factory, if you give your dealer's name.

FARM and GARDEN

Five dollars will be paid by The Tribune for every farmer's letter printed in the "Farm and Garden" department, pointing out "what's wrong with farming."

Every farmer has his own ideas about what his greatest troubles are and how the ills of agriculture may be corrected. Public opinion will help remedy the present condition in the farming field if farmers will aid in familiarizing the people with their worries.

Send in your opinion about the farmer's greatest problems today, whether it is taxes, corn acreage reduction, grain prices, finances, renter and landowner's difficulties, agricultural organizations, co-operative buying and selling associations, or any other factors aiding or stumbling blocks preventing the restoration of the farmer's buying power.

The Tribune would like to have your photograph along with your letter. Address the Agricultural Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Improved Dairy Herds Aim of Illinois Farmers

By Frank Ridgway.

Up in Jo Daviess county, the little Switzerland of Illinois, the county agent has been busy all winter with the Guernsey and Holstein breeders, organizing a system of coöperative ownership of bulls. They have been buying bulls all fall and organizing breeding blocks, preparing to get rid of the scrubs before spring.

Guernsey breeders in the Apple river district came to the conclusion that their production was not in balance with their highly organized marketing agency, and last fall they started out to get to the bottom of their troubles. C. C. Burns, farm adviser at Elizabeth, learned of the individual dairyman's worries, and sent out seventeen cards, asking the dairymen to meet in his office to see if something could not be done to solve their breeding problems.

Joint Discussion Constructive.

All of the seventeen farmers answered the call. They came in after milking time one evening and spent most of the night in the county agent's office discussing their difficulties. It was almost milking time when they got home the next morning, but they considered the night well spent, for they laid plans for one of the most constructive pieces of work in the improvement of dairy cattle that has ever been started in Illinois.

This coöperative bull block association, the only one regularly organized in this state, marks the first successful introduction into Illinois of the principle of the organized bull associations which have had so much to do with the upbuilding of the pure bred dairy cattle in Pennsylvania and New York.

Sixteen farmers are members of the Jo Daviess County Guernsey association. The members of the association have been divided into eight blocks. One bull is assigned to a block, each block being formed to include, as nearly as possible, sixty cows—no more.

Rules Are Simple.

The rules of the organization are simple. Each member pays $5 a cow toward the original cost of the bulls. In several cases a single farmer owns enough cows to constitute a block, in other cases two and three and even more farms are included in a single block.

Each bull is assigned to a block for two years, and is then passed on to some other block at the end of the second year. For example, the bull assigned to block No. 1 remains for two years, then is assigned to block No. 2 for two years, then to No. 3, etc. This is done to avoid inbreeding.

Through careful buying the association has been able to buy eight of the best bulls, and has $200 left in the treasury toward future purchases and incidental expenses. Five of these bulls are sired by King of Chilmark, said to be one of the greatest living Guernsey bulls, and he is grandsire of the other three, making it possible for the farmers to use the same line of breeding.

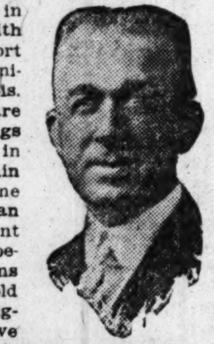
Cook County Beekeepers to Meet Here Tomorrow

Tomorrow night the Cook County Beekeepers' association will hold its first indoor meeting at the Great Northern hotel. At 8 o'clock George S. Demuth, formerly with the United States department of agriculture and now editor of Gleanings in Bee Culture, will speak on "Up to Date Bee Management."

The $4 Mr. Demuth earned building fires for his teacher in a district school when he was a boy started him in the bee business, and he has been in close touch with the practical side of running an apiary ever since.

There is enough nectar going to waste every season in the city limits of Chicago because there is a lack of bees to make tens of thousands of dollars' worth of honey, according to Samuel Cushman, president of the association. In his talk Monday night Mr. Demuth will tell Chicagoans how to gather the nectar.

YIELD, NOT BEAUTY, CORN SHOW MOTTO



A. A. HILL.

Corn belt farmers are taking an unusual interest in the Utility Corn show which is being held this week in connection with the farmers' short course at the University of Illinois. Corn shows are common things among farmers in this great grain belt, but this one is attracting an unusual amount of attention because it threatens to upset the old standards of judging that have been the farmer's guide in selecting seed corn for many years. Corn that will not produce results from a utility standpoint is not welcome at this show, which is the second state-wide corn show of its kind that has ever been held in Illinois.

The highest yielding corn will be given first place. Beauty will have little chance to win with J. R. Holbert and A. A. Hill the judges, for it is to be an exhibit based on practical usefulness.

J. C. Hackleman of the farm crops department at the university says that the show thus far has proved a decided success. One hundred and fifty-five samples of corn produced by farmers who grow "just corn" have been entered. Northern Illinois farmers are represented by exhibitors from sixteen counties, seventeen counties in the central part of the state, and seven southern counties are in the race this year.

The judges do not trust their eyes and hands altogether in making their decisions. Kernels were picked from the samples and put on a germinator several days ago, and next Tuesday the judges will make their final readings. Thirty-five points out of a possible hundred on the score card are given to the germination records.

Wednesday is utility seed corn day at the university, and the good and the weak points of the winning and losing corn samples will be pointed out to the visitors.

J. R. HOLBERT.

Mr. Holbert, one of the judges and a representative of the department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., has probably done more corn root rot investigation work than any other person in the United States. It is through his work in fields near Bloomington during the last seven or eight years that many of the principles used in working out the score card have been made possible.

The good and the bad points will be indicated by the vigor of the seedlings and their freedom from disease, such as corn root rot. Vigor is indicated by the strong, sturdy shoots and the number of healthy roots, while freedom from disease is associated with the lack of mold or decay on the kernels, roots, shoots, and germ.

Winter Wheat Crop Good.

Illinois farmers are boasting a bit about their winter wheat crop. They have about 80,000 acres more this year than they had last, or a total of about 2,775,000 acres, according to estimates. Crop reporters from all over the state find wheat in fine shape. The weather has been generally good all fall and winter, and as a result the growing wheat crop is in much better shape than it has been at the beginning of the year for several seasons. In spite of lacking a protective snow blanket, there is no indication the wheat will be damaged.

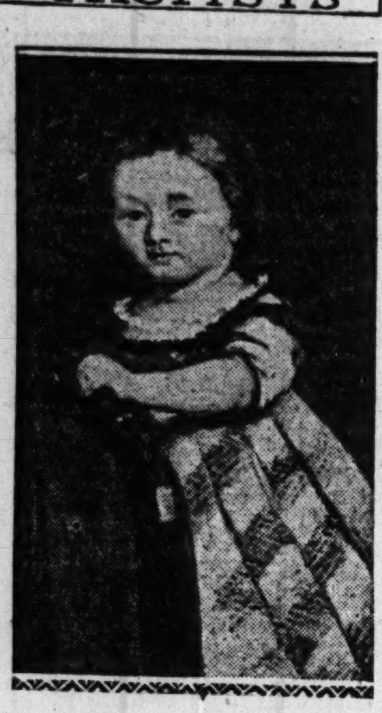
ART AND ARTISTS

Chicago Artists' Annual Exhibit Opens Thursday

By Eleanor Jewett.



"Portrait of a Child," by Gustave Courbet. This is but one of many modern French paintings being shown under the auspices of the American Art association in New York. Another, seen here recently at the Arts club, is Henri Matisse's "Head of a Woman."

INVITATIONS have been issued by the Art institute, the Municipal Art league, and the Artists of Chicago to the opening reception of the annual exhibition of works of artists of Chicago and vicinity, on Thursday afternoon of this week. The exhibition will remain on view until Feb. 28. At the same time there will be shown in the print room the twelfth annual exhibition of etchings, under the management of the Chicago Society of Etchers.

The following statement, in regard to the paintings by Chicago artists, was sent with the invitation, and is true enough in the spirit of the language used to merit partial repetition here:

"The trustees of the Art institute of Chicago again are given the pleasure of announcing to the members the annual exhibition of paintings and sculpture by artists of Chicago and vicinity. It is with no small degree of pride that we have watched the development of this exhibition from its modest beginnings to the attainment of a standard which places it on a par with the most notable exhibitions of our country."

From this significant statement it goes on to say that most of the 300 works shown are for sale and that all, in being placed on view, have received the indorsement of a competent jury. "For permanent investment, for the enrichment of Chicago homes, for the encouragement of our local artists, we predict an even greater measure of support than has been given to the successful exhibitions of former years."

It is enthusiastically to be hoped that such support will be given this exhibit.

Probably the most important announcement of the week in matters mundane, though dealing with art, was the definite information given out concerning a new home for our artist colony. Cedar street is an ideal location for such a colony. Besides, the plan of our new Bohemia is delightful to contemplate. The buildings are to face on an inner court and be divided by four intersecting narrow streets, lined by attractive tiny tearooms and curio shops. Rather temptingly like the shops one finds in Florence along that famous old bridge which spans the Arno, one thinks it sounds. The roofed inner court reminds one again of a Spanish patio, with the addition of the roof to exclude Chicago's temperamental wind and weather.

But the merely physical details of the new studio quarter are not the total of its charms. The clink of coin upon coin must be heard, too, for thorough appreciation. And that clink is not as flamboyant as one might fear. The prices of the studios will range from $40 a month (a most reasonable minimum, one would think) to the more expensive studios composed of several rooms.

Now all that remains for mortal genius to wish is the swift fulfillment of the whole design.

Nicholas Roerich, whose opera, "The Snow Maiden," was unfortunately not produced this year, is at the head of a novel attempt along artistic lines which, though its foundation is in New York, may well be spoken of here. In his exhibition last season at the Art institute one became imbued with Roerich's strong feeling for the unity, the oneness, of all the arts. His present effort is directed along this line. He is establishing a school in New York, which he has well named "The Master School of United Arts." It will instruct pupils in music, painting, sculpture, architecture, opera class ballet, and drama. For the several courses contemplated the best exponents of each are have been invited. Under their expert tutelage great things are expected of the favored pupils.

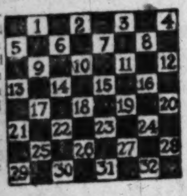
The Business Men's Art club has arranged a dinner in the Art institute club rooms for tomorrow evening. The dinner will be followed by a lecture given by Charles Vezin, ex-president of the Art Students' league and the Salmagundi club.

A recent gift of importance made by the Colonial Dames to the Chicago Public School Art society is a completed industrial art cabinet beautifully and perfectly fitted throughout. The meaning of "industrial art cabinet" may need a little explaining. The society has undertaken to furnish the public schools of Chicago with cabinets, each of which deals with some form of practical or industrial art, and explains that art in detail by means of examples.

For instance, the first cabinet held examples of various nations' embroidery, Russian drawn work, Japanese wood carving, American Indian bead work, French dolls, and other items, all correctly labeled. They are meant to suggest ideas to the children, not to be copied exactly. The success of these cabinets in teaching has been immense.

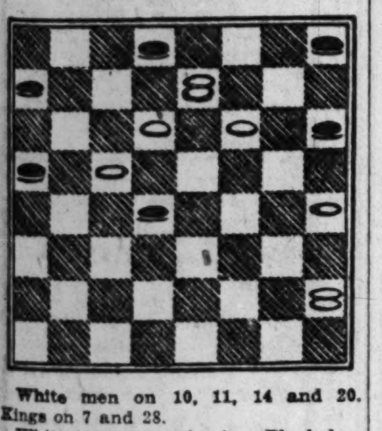
CHECKERBOARD PUZZLES

by P. H. Ketchum



Squares on the checkerboard are numbered from 1 to 32, beginning at the upper left hand corner and running from left to right, as shown on the diagram. It will be necessary to refer to this for the solution to the puzzle. The white squares are used so the checkers will show.

Black men on 2, 4, 5, 12, 13, and 18.



White men on 10, 11, 14 and 20. Kings on 7 and 28.

White to move and win. Black has a strong looking position, but white wins by a neat stroke. It is all done by jumps, remember.

SOLUTION TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE.

Black men on 11 and 20. Kings on 10, 13, and 26.

White men on 24, 25, and 27. Kings on 18 and 32.

White to move and win—25-22, 26-17, 27-23, 20-27, 18-22, 17-19, 32-14, white wins.

Is United States to Discontinue Air Mail Service?

BY MORROW KRUM.

THE United States air mail service, which, since Sept. 8, 1920, has delivered mail along a continuous route between San Francisco and New York, is now threatened by the appropriations committee of the house on the ground that it is an expensive service and not of particular advantage.

The director of the budget regarded the air mail service as absolutely necessary, and recommended $2,200,000 for the next fiscal year, July, 1922-July, 1923. The subcommittee of the house appropriations committee reduced that figure to $1,935,000. On Jan. 11 the house appropriations committee entirely eliminated the air mail appropriation, and sent the bill to the floor of the house, where it is now being debated.

If the committee's action is sustained by the house and senate there will be no air mail after July 1.

The New York-San Francisco air mail service is being maintained this fiscal year on an appropriation of $1,425,000. More than 90,000,000 letters have been carried through the air since the service was started. It now takes approximately forty-eight hours for the air mail service to cross the continent. The train service does the same thing in 100 hours. A record of efficiency and performance has been maintained.

One hundred and five of the larger cities of the nation have petitioned the government to provide them with an air mail service. The air mail service is conceded one of the greatest instruments for promoting civilian and commercial aviation. It has been a model for all other countries. This government does not subsidize aviation transportation companies. The only aid it has given commercial aviation is through the air mail service.

The national advisory committee for aeronautics sent out last week a strong appeal to the people of the nation to rally to the support of the air mail service.

"Is America to entirely forget aviation, the science it developed during the war?" asks the appeal. "Are we going to do away entirely with all government encouragement of commercial aviation? How are our aviators going to keep in training? How are our airplane builders going to keep on building and doing the research work? What will become of American aviation if the air mail is abandoned?

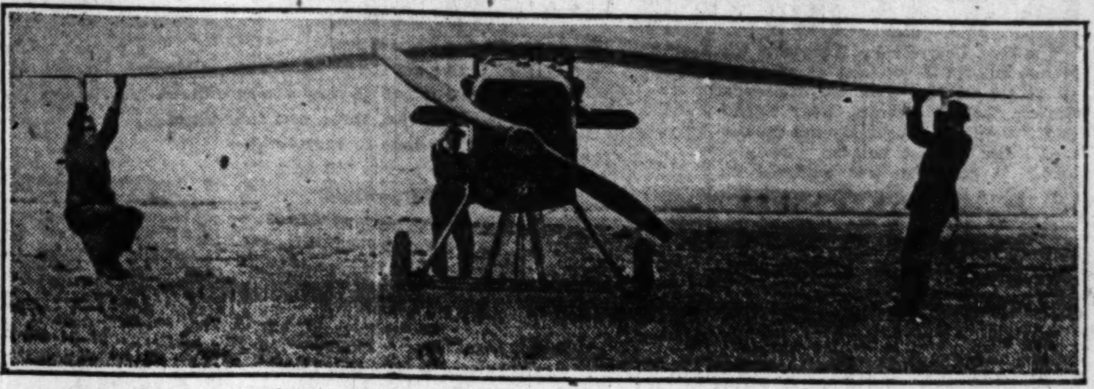
Commercial aviation is a thriving industry, but it needs government encouragement.

The air mail is considered necessary by every aeronautical expert in the country.

Trophy Race

The Pulitzer trophy race next year will be held under the same conditions and over the course originally scheduled for Detroit in 1921.

THE "ALULA" WINGS



In the picture workmen are demonstrating the strength of the "Alula" wings of the new British aerial destroyer, a superfighter of the air, which was recently tested at Northholt airdrome. The new plane attained a speed of 180 miles an hour and climbed 3,000 feet in 72 seconds. [Wide World Photo.]

Boost Aviation.

Commodore Sheldon Clark of the Chicago Yacht club announced last week the appointment of an aviation committee of the club. The committee is composed of J. F. Cornelius, chairman; W. Mitchell Blair, and Phillip K. Wrigley. This committee will investigate the local flying situation and make arrangements to help Chicago in a comprehensive drive to become the center of American aviation.

Detroit News Trophy

The Detroit News aerial mail trophy for multi-motored aeroplanes will be held under the same conditions and over the course originally scheduled for Detroit in 1921.

Schroeder to Build Gliders This Summer

R. W. SCHROEDER, former holder of the world's altitude record, announced last week that he and two or three young men are going to experiment with soarers and gliders this summer.

"The motorless airplane seems futile to the general public," said Mr. Schroeder, "but in reality it has a great future. One German flew five miles without a motor. It means a study of air currents and of light machines. Have you ever watched a hawk or gull rise almost vertically without moving his wings? The bird gets in a rising air current and is carried upward without an effort.

"The same is true of the soaring machines. I am merely going to try to discover the secrets of the soaring birds and put them into practice. It is a branch of aviation that has a great future."

AVIATION QUERIES

Questions regarding aviation will be answered in this column of The Sunday Tribune. If a lengthy or personal answer is desired, send a stamped addressed envelope. Address Aviation Editor, The Chicago Tribune.

A Graduate.

"Is it possible for a graduate of a civilian flying school to secure a position with the air mail service?

"M. L."

Yes, if you are a capable pilot.

Opportunity.

"Is there an opportunity for a young man to get a job in the government service or in an airplane company?

"J. H."

The jobs are nearly all filled at present. With the opening of the flying season there will be a boom.

Magazines.

"Please tell me where I can subscribe to a magazine showing illustrations of an airplane. U. L. B."

At any stationery store where magazines are sold or any book store.

Confession

By Guy Lee

Across the aisle Dolores sits,
  Her head inclined in prayerful bow;
The sunlight o'er her tresses flits,
  A studious wrinkle marks her brow.
The pastor's words I ought to prize,
  They guide me in the heavenly search,
But I am busy otherwise
  When fair Dolores goes to church.

Ah, me! Ah, me! The joy of youth!
  And youthful love—ah me, once more!
I must confess the bitter truth:
  My hair (what's left of it) is hoar,
And I am raving, as a ghost
  Dolores near me seems to perch,
For it's been years since I can boast
  Of having been inside a church.

THE motor of the New Series of the good Maxwell is so finely balanced that high speeds are attained with minimum vibration.

This absence of vibration reduces wear, and assures a minimum of repair and maintenance costs.

These mechanical elements of great value are fittingly augmented by the great beauty of the New Series.

No Light – Open Line or Shorted Plug.
Dim Light – Faulty Plug or Wiring.
Spark-C

Spark-C is 7¼ Inches Long

Here is the Westinghouse ignition tester

Spark-C

Sees all—knows all—tells all about your ignition

With this tester any man—novice or expert—can check up the ignition on his car. You can find out in two minutes whether or not every cylinder is getting the right spark every time. If there is trouble in the ignition system, you can detect it and trace it to the exact spot.

It doesn't take any knowledge of ignition systems to use Spark-C. There is no more dirt in using Spark-C than there is in signing your name—and it's practically as easy. No chance of an electric shock—no danger of getting your hand too near the running engine.

Not a screw to be turned

You do nothing with Spark-C except touch the spark-plug connection and follow the wires to the coil or magneto. You don't disconnect a single wire, or unscrew the plug. You could use it with white kid gloves without soiling them.

There is nothing to wear out in Spark-C. It has a lifetime of use in it. It should become a vital accessory for every car—kept in the car at all times for periodical testings and for emergency use. It is just big enough to do the work safely and well. The inside of Spark-C is a miracle of delicate, scientific electrical construction, yet as safe from damage in use as a monkey wrench is.

Spark-C tells you

Instantly and surely Spark-C tells you if the spark-plug is dead or alive; whether the spark gap is normal, too wide, or too close; whether the points are clean or dirty; whether the plug is receiving enough current or not. It tells you if there is a break in the line from the coil, magneto or distributor to the plugs—and where it is. It locates the spot where current leaks.

If one or more plugs are firing irregularly—missing every third or fourth time—Spark-C tells you. What you find out in a moment might take an expert ignition man hours to discover if he used rule-of-thumb—or screw-driver—methods.

Spark-C tests all high-tension ignition systems, whether the current come from dry-cells, storage battery or magneto. It is particularly useful for automobiles, motorcycles, motorboats, and airplanes.

Who makes it? Westinghouse

That name on anything electrical is the guarantee—the signed, sworn statement that this article is what we say it is, will do what we say it will, and is worth the price we ask for it.

Spark-C will be on exhibition Jan. 28th to Feb. 4th, at the Chicago Automobile Show, Space 62-63, Basement, Coliseum. Come and see it demonstrated. Ask your garage man or automotive accessory dealer for a Westinghouse Spark-C. If he has none in stock, give him your order, but be sure he understands you want Westinghouse Spark-C.

[Toloff Photo.]

The Rev. James Madison Stifler, D. D., is pastor of the First Baptist church, Chicago avenue and Lake street, Evanston, Ill., which is engaged in building a church school as a part of the present church plant costing in excess of $200,000. The work is already in process of construction. The material used is Bedford stone of an adapted Tudor-Gothic style with a square tower at the angle of the L-shaped building. There are 198 feet of frontage on Raymond park.

The main hall, 40x67 feet, will be a memorial to Lieut. Kenneth MacLeish, who lost his life while serving in the naval aviation forces of the United States.

The Rev. Lawrence C. Ferguson will preach his initial sermon at 11 today as rector of St. Simon's Episcopal church, Leland avenue, near Broadway, "the little church around the corner." His subject will be "Undying Fire." A reception was tendered the new rector last Wednesday evening.

Church officials of the Chicago district of the United Evangelical church will meet next Friday at the Central Young Men's Christian association to discuss how to make church work more effective.

Dr. William J. Hutchins, president of Berea college, will speak at 8 this evening at the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall on "The Ruler of Kings." Dr. Hutchins was the winner of a $5,000 prize for his "Code of Morals for Boys and Girls." At 7 o'clock motion pictures taken in the Cumberland foothills will be shown.

Confirmation services will be held today in the Irving Park Lutheran church, the Rev. Joshua Oden, pastor. In the evening the Northland ladies' trio will sing. The pastor will sail for the Holy Land Feb. 1.

The Edgewater Presbyterian church, which is already planning the erection of a new building, costing with the new lots purchased, $500,000, has announced a five-year subscription plan. The building committee has subscribed $90,000 and it expresses the hope that actual building will begin within one year.

The Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, formerly Episcopal missionary bishop of Utah, now national secretary of the Fellowship Reconciliation, will preach today at 11 a. m. at St. George's church, 76th street, near Cottage Grove avenue. At 3:30 p. m. he will speak at Howell Neighborhood house, 1831 Racine avenue. On Tuesday at 12:30 he will speak at a luncheon of the commission on world friendship in rooms 302-3-19 South La Salle street. Bishop Jones resigned as missionary bishop of Utah because of criticisms of him as a pacifist. There is an agitation now to restore him to an active position in the church.

The Presbyterian Sunday schools throughout the nation will contribute today for the relief of the starving children of the near east.

Slams of Life

THE PHYSICAL CULTURE BLUES.

I've got the blues,
I've got the blues,
I've got the physical culture blues—
The drill 'em till they are sore blues,
The one, two, three, and four blues.
"You will love to exercise!"—
Why do people tell such lies?
O, my sterno-hyoid!
My sterno-cleido-mastoid!
My poor serratus magnus!
My numb scalenus anticus!

My supinator longus,
That used to be so strongus,
Is now a pale and feeble wreck;
OUCH!—my stomach! OH!—my neck!
Five, six, seven, EIGHT.
Watta life! Watta fate!
One, two; one, two—
Ouch! Oh! Gosh! Oooh!

I've got the blues, the black-and-blues,
The physical, dizzical blues,
The soak 'em till they're raw blues,
Poke 'em in the craw blues,
The aching anatomical,
Painful gastronomical,
The pectoralis major blues!
Black-and-blues!

WORDEN-WOOD

See Europe This Year

Now is the Time to Plan Your Trip

THIS is the year to see Europe. Thousands of Americans are going. A vast change is in progress throughout the Continent and England—Europe is seething with new ideas, new impulses, a cross-sea of conflicting aspirations, interests, hopes.

Side by side with this New Europe is Old Europe, the Europe of ancient and splendid tradition, of Art and Letters and Music. It is a situation infinitely dramatic—a drama that may never be played again. See Europe this year, before this opportunity passes. Visit the great battlefields before reconstruction obliterates all traces of them. Get acquainted with changing business conditions. A vacation in Europe now costs less. The average American salary is a rich man's income in Europe today.

U. S. Government ships are now among the finest afloat. They are famed alike for comfort, cuisine and service. The S. S. George Washington, flagship of the Shipping Board's great fleet, is an aristocrat of the Seas. You will be proud to sail on such a ship, knowing that it is in part, your ship. See Europe this year, when you can see more at less cost. Send in the coupon and let your Government give you the information you need.

Your Government wishes the name of every prospective traveler. If you are considering an ocean voyage anywhere, send the information blank now—no matter when you intend to go. You will receive without cost the Government's booklet of authentic travel information; descriptions of ships and literature on foreign lands. You will be under no obligation.

If you cannot take an ocean trip, clip the information blank anyway and urge some friend who may go to send it in. Do not send the blank in for your friend; simply urge him to send it in. Thus you too will help build the American Merchant Marine.

AT LAST POSSIBLE TO PICK YOUR OWN IDEAL TOUR

Raymond-Whitcomb Give To All Travelers The First Complete Information

Distributing a Book Absolutely Unique in Travel History—"The Raymond-Whitcomb Guide to Winter Travel" Does for Travel Planning what Guide Books Did for Steady Sojourning—Another Record Broken.

Raymond-Whitcomb have broken another travel record in an extraordinary book they have just published. They have come to know from 44 years successful experience in giving the best of Americans "The Best in Travel" that there are people who wish to pick out their own particular journey—perhaps to visit a relative, or to see some point especially dreamt of, but first every would-be traveler has to ask himself or herself these three questions:

Three Vital Questions

"Where can I go?"
"How long will it take?"
"How much will it cost?"

Heretofore only a travel expert could answer these questions. Raymond-Whitcomb, however, have now prepared a book which will enable any intelligent man or woman to answer these questions so far as America and the West Indies are concerned. It really does for the travel-planner what Karl Baedeker or the Blue Guide did for the permanent sojourner.

Never Before Available

So much accurate travel information in convenient form has never before been made available. The editor says that it is the boiled-down contents of literally thousands of books, pamphlets and circulars from 1000 railroads, 100 steamship lines and 5000 hotels in America alone. Though "The Raymond-Whitcomb Guide to Winter Travel" is encyclopaedic, it is also fascinatingly interesting.

Limited Edition Ready

A limited edition is now being distributed. It may be secured upon application ("in person, by mail, telegraph or telephone") to the Raymond & Whitcomb's local office, 17 Temple Place, Boston, telephone Beach 6964. It will be safer to apply quickly—preferably to day.

LEARN THE AUTOMOBILE TRADE IN OUR REPAIR SHOP. THE STUDENT ACTUALLY DOES THE WORK

When we say we teach the Automobile Trade by practical methods, we mean that students are taken into our Repair Shops and taught to repair all makes of Automobiles by actually doing the work required on these cars. We obtain our jobs just the same as any repair shop in the city. We advertise our work at extremely low prices—just enough to cover breakage—and car owners bring their automobiles into our shops to be repaired, overhauled, etc. This work is all done by the student, supervised by instructors who act as shop foremen. We do not have a bunch of junk cars that is pulled apart by one gang of students, put together by another gang, pulled apart by a third gang, etc. Ours is fresh, new, clean work, coming in just as fast as we can handle it. When a student finishes one job, another is waiting for him. Fords, Dodges, Buicks, Cadillacs, Hudsons—everything with a gas engine—are taken into our shops, repaired by our students, and sent out as good as new.

The driving also is taught right out on the road, by actual practice. The student is placed behind the wheel, an instructor at his side, and drives up one street, down another, etc., until he actually knows how to drive. NO MATTER HOW MANY LESSONS ARE REQUIRED.

THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR BREAKAGE. The money that the car owner pays for having his work done covers all breakage of any kind. YOUR TUITION FEE IS ALL THAT YOU PAY.

School is in session every day in the week, beginning at 9 a. m., and every evening, beginning at 7. The student comes as much of this time as he can. OUR COURSES ARE UNLIMITED. THE STUDENT STAYS WITH US UNTIL HE FEELS PERFECTLY CONFIDENT THAT HE UNDERSTANDS THE TRADE.

Courses, $15, $25, $30, $45. Can arrange time payments.

We will be glad to have you come and spend a day or an evening with us FREE OF CHARGE, just to see what we do and how we do it. YOU WILL BE UNDER NO OBLIGATION WHATSOEVER, AND WE WILL NOT EVEN ASK YOUR NAME.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR

without the use of powder, pastes, solutions of burning liquids, or electric needles.

This new and profitable study will be operated under the name of "THE ART AND SCIENCE OF FACIAL CHEMISTRY," and all diplomas will bear the seal and signature of Dr. Jules M. Marton, Ph. D., Consulting Chemist, who is a post-graduate in two of the greatest universities of the world, Berne and Budapest.

Day and evening classes will be conducted and only a limited number of students can be accommodated. So we request that you make your reservations immediately.

and will immediately offer to those who are looking for a choice, highly restricted homesite or investment, large lots 60x160 feet, at unusually low prices of $395 to $600, and will sell on very easy terms to responsible parties. Bank Deposits.

When one deposits his money in a bank what assurances has he that it is safe? A bank's soundness depends on a number of things which the depositor should know and consider. Behind the deposits stands the total amount of the bank's capital, surplus, and undivided profits, the integrity and efficiency of its officers and directors, and the soundness of its investments and loans. There is also, in case of trouble, the liability of the stockholders which, in Illinois, is double—that is, they can be called upon to contribute towards the repayment of depositors up to twice the par value of the stock they hold, should the bank become insolvent. Some additional protection is afforded the depositor by the state and federal governments through their bank examiners and also compelling the banks to publish their figures at odd times through "bank calls." The clearing house association also has its bank examiners who keep it posted to some extent on the condition of its member banks.

The failure of a large number of banks in North Dakota and other agricultural states has caused some depositors to fear for the safety of their deposits in any bank, but the causes of many of those failures do not exist in states where industries are varied. In a state where practically the only source of wealth is grain, as in the Dakotas, or cotton, as in some of the southern states, or cattle, as in the southwest, the failure of the crop or a great fall in the market value of that particular product, on which the banks have almost exclusively loaned their money, may wipe out their loans and cause their insolvency. On the other hand, in a city like Chicago or a state like Illinois, where there is a great variety of different kinds of industries to be financed, the banks can so diversify their loans that even if one or more of their borrowers should fail there will still be a number of their loans that are good and they may not greatly suffer because their eggs are not all in one basket.

Of course it cannot be said that all banks in any community are sound. Perhaps the chief factor of safety must be looked for in the honesty, efficiency, experience, and standing of the officers and directors. These should be reputable men, well known in the community, whose integrity is above question and who are known to have good business judgment that will enable them to select sound investments for the bank's funds. Their individual wealth is also an additional safeguard because it enables them to assist with their personal funds in case of emergency. A bank should maintain a ratio between its capital, surplus, and undivided profits, on the one hand, and its deposits on the other, which ratio, for safety, roughly should be around 1 to 10. This is not a fixed rule, but if deposits become greatly in excess of ten times capital, surplus, and undivided profits combined the bank gets topheavy and its soundness is weakened. If deposits drop much below a 7 to 1 ratio the bank cannot run profitably. The ratio given is, of course, only approximate, but may serve roughly as a guide.

Another Brokerage Firm Fails and Is Suspended

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 21.—Receivers were appointed today for the stock brokerage firm of Edwin E. Kohn & Co. on a bill in equity filed in common pleas court by creditors alleging insolvency. The bill claimed the concern's liabilities would reach at least $500,000, and that the assets would not be over $200,000, "probably less." Members of the firm admitted its insolvency. David Phillips and Thomas M. Hindman were appointed receivers.

The New York Consolidated exchange announced suspension of the firm later in the day.

·THE · TRIBUNE'S · WANT · AD · SLOGAN·

MR. G. L——, influenced by the fact that he was in a hurry to leave the city and take up the business of existence in another city, inserted this Want Ad in The Tribune to sell his house:

FOR SALE—7 RM. RESIDENCE ON NORTH Side. If interested call Ravens. ——.

It was a good house, with plenty of features that would interest a person looking for a house in Ravenswood, but all Mr. G. L—— said about it was that there was a "7-room residence for sale on North Side." And, as there were probably many houses on the North Side for sale that day, and as many of these were described and dwelt upon in sufficient detail, while Mr. G. L——'s house was not at all well represented, he received no response to his ad. A Tribune Adtaker phoned him and offered to help him write a Want Ad that would give prospective house-buyers a better idea of what Mr. G. L—— had to offer.

FOR SALE—RAVENSWOOD 7 RM. FRAME residence on concrete; 30x125 ft. lot; h. w. ht.; hardwood finish; newly decorated; large front porch; 2 car garage; 2 blk. surf. Owner leaving city, sacrifice part cash, balance terms; imm. poss. See any time. 000 N. Campbell-av. Ravenswood 000.

This Want Ad was inserted and returns were quickly forthcoming. Good prospects were secured and the house sold. Next time Mr. G. L—— will use the Tribune's Want Ad slogan first: The more you tell, the quicker you sell!
